Mocking Bird Ahead Of City Attraction.

Robert Quillan, the writing genius whose articles appear in most of the newspapers of the country, runs a little paper in his home town of Fountain Inn, S. C., for his own amusement. In it appears many many fine articles which he does not send to the other newspapers. One of these articles last week was headed "Hick Stuff," and reads as follows:

Some months ago a brilliant writer from the great metropolis discussed Fountain Inn in a magazine article and intimated that nobody would live here who could get away.

I have thought of that statement many times since, and the revelation it makes seems more and more pathetic.

Some years ago an old Negro who had spent most of his life in the penitentiary was pardoned by the Governor. He spent two days in the open and then came back and asked the prison officials to admit him again.

The enclosing walls and the enforced intimacy of prison life had become essential to his happiness.

I suppose something of that kind happens to the New Yorker. The rectangular buildings that shut out most of the sunlight and all of the horizon become endeared to him. He learns to enjoy the jostling, impolite, impersonal crowds that jabber in strange dialects, the cops that tell him when to start and stop, the officicious somebodies that tell him where to sit and what to do, the impudent servants, the palms forever extended for tips, the endless noise, the system that keeps him forever hurrying to meet a schedule not of his choosing.

Well, it shows what habit will do to you.

For my part I'll take the country.

It is true that the village itself offers little that is beautiful and much that is depressing and perhaps degrading.

There are weed-grown vacant lots, wind-blown trash caught against curbs and wire fences, wooden shacks no longer useful and rotting on their feet, and cheap buildings made of corrugated iron—the ugliest of all human inventions.

And because good Christians sometimes become thoughtless and don't give a darn what happens to the neighbors, there are howling dogs and bawling cows that keep you awake at night.

But five minutes after I leave my home afoot I can be in open country that is much as God made it—or I can reach it in less time in a car And at once as though by magic, I have the brooding silence and the peace of a primitive world.

Say what you will, it does something to your soul. You forget the foolish works of a foolish world and get a proper sense of values.

From my own front porch I can see every sunrise and sunset and breathe the sweet clean air that blows up all the way from the Gulf without meeting an obstruction.

Best of all—Oh, best of all things in this imperfect world!—I can hear the mocking birds by day and by night.

Maybe I am a crank about it, but in all seriousness and in literal truth I had rather live the rest of my days in a log cabin, where I could hear mocking birds every night, than to live in the finest palace and never hear them. In fact, I simply wouldn't live in any part of the country where mocking birds are strangers

That will sound daft to people who get their pleasure from other things, but there it is.

It so happens that the only things I greatly enjoy—the only things that seem essential to my pleasure in living are things that the poorest nigger in the land can share. All of them are found in the country.

Big-town people berate and ridicule the village because its people gossip. But metropolitans also gossip about the few people they know, and the village gossip is nearly always fair.

It handles you rough if you are a thief or a dead-beat or a drunkard, but it is generous so long as you pay your debts and behave yourself.

And despite gossip you are free at all times and do precisely as you please, and none dare tell you to quit this or that or stop or move on.

Read This, Dry Folks.

"The election was carried by hypocrites, bootleggers and superstitious women. Let's not have these pious hypocrites in office, or we will be beyond redemption. The rank and file of business men and working men were in favor of repeal." The above gassy substance was copied from the Winston-Salem Journal, Nov. 23rd, and was signed by one Dr. R. D. Flippin, who claims to be a resident of Pilot Mountain. Just what church he belongs to and whether he is a horse doctor, dentist or medical doctor, we can't say. If he tells the truth, North Carolina has an over-production of superstitious women, hypocrites and bootleggers.

Keystone Solon Attacks Johnson.

United States Senator David A. Reed, of Pennsylvania, is another solon who does not belived that the sun rises and sets in President Franklin D. Roosevelt and his man Friday, General Hugh S. Johnson, NRA Dictator.

In a speech at Harrisburg, at the annual convention of the Pennsylvania Council of Republican Women, Senator Reed attacked the NRA, the proposed inflation of the currency and the "ostensible dictatorship" imposed on the people by the by the Roosevelt administration.

Dwelling momentarily on the elections, Senator Reed deplored the fact that the Republican Party has been devoting "to much attention to organization; too little to the type of its candidates."

He suggested a firm stand on balanced currency as the most feasible plank in the Republican Party's next campaign platform.

"Apparently we are headed for inflation of currency," the senator Pennsylvania Senator declared, "Once before that occurred—in the 70's it took the Republicans ten years to restore the country to normal."

Senator Reed saw in the pending recognition of Russia a plan of the administration for loaning money to the "worst credit risk in the world." He pointed out that this country did more business with Russia three years ago than any other, without recognition.

Concerning the outcome of the NRA, Senator Reed said:

"All of America's industries can't be regimented by epithets from General Johnson. We owe it to our country and our President to support his plan, but, as the minority party now, it is our duty, to point out mistakes."—Ex.

Wedded At 72.

Mrs. Charity Westbrook and James Holland, both in their 72nd year were married Sunday afternoon at the Christian church, at Eureka, Wayne county. The marriage of this aged couple came as a great surprise to the neighborhood

Let,s see! What was it the governor of North Carolina said to the governor of South Carolina?—Ex.

From this distance it looks like the Tammany Tiger is nothing more than a harmless hearth cat. —Ex.

Depend On Charity.

After recounting the activities of one of her farmer friends who, on two-three acres of land han done pretty well, thank you you in providing for his family this winter, Miss Nancy Ruth Reeves, editor of The Skyland Post, adds:

"This year has been a boutiful crop year. Even now apples are wasting in many our orchards which could be dried and put to a good use later on in the winter. Yet, instead of exerting ourselves to use what we have before us, many of us are manking long journeys on foot to the welfare office to get free cloths, free pork, or free anything—just so the label free is on it. There is no free pork outside of that used by the schools to feed children of needy families. There is pork to be had but it must be worked for.

"The sick and afflicted, the widows and the aged may be in real need of aid, but as far as food is concerned our aole-bodied families should be facing the winter, unafriad, if they have used the summer hours to any advantage at all."

This is splendid philoscphy, even if it comes a little late in the season, to work any good However, the chances are that those whom Miss Reeves described as able-bodied families," would not have accepted the advice she gives, if it had been passed out to them back there when the sun was hot.

The habit of depending on charity and government to help constitutes a weakness of our economic system that, if encouraged, my develop into a national sore. Handouts that have no strings to them are not always the best for the recipients. There are too many cases of definiite need, to be careless in charity donations, and those coming with an itching palm at winter time, should be asked a few questions about how they enjoyed their summer vacation.—The Elkin Tribune.

A Heavy Toll.

A survey by a prominent accident insurance company reveals that from 6 a. m. to 6 p. m in 1932, there were 409,100 accidents in which 13,500 persons were killed, or 32 for every 1,000 accidents. Erom 6 p. m. to 6 a. m. there were 336 200 accidents, but 15,500 deathhs. or 46 per 1,000. In other words the death rate per accident was 43 7 per cent worse during darkness than in daylight. These figures would have been still more unfavorable, if they had started at 5 p. m. instead of 6 p. m., particularly in winter.

Automobile accidents during dusk and darkness are more likely to result in serious injuries and death, because vision is reduced by either inadequate illumination or too much, which is another way of saying that something ought to be done about glaring headlights.

Twenty-nine thousand deaths from auto accidents in one year is a terrible toll to take, when much of it could be prevented. We are disposed to hold up our hands in protest when a football player gets knocked cold, but killing by auto has come to be so common, that we bury the victims without stopping to wonder who's next.- Ex.

Will Celebrate 100th Anniversary.

Wake Forest, Nov. 26 --Two Davie county men are among the 900 students enrolled this semester at Wake Forest College. They are G. F. Harding, and P. E. Hendricks. The Baptist institution, now in its 100th year, will celebrate its Centennial anniversary next spring with the completion of a new and handsome administration building. Its medical school has just moved into new quasters, the William Amos Johnson medical building.

The Future Of Beer In This State.

We believe the attitude of the friends of prohibition in North Carolina toward 3 2 beer is one of watchful waiting. Whether or not the next legislature will repeal the present beer law will depend, we are sure, upon the effect of beer on law and order this state.

If it is found that the legal sale of beer tends to increase drinking of intoxicating liquors; if it is found to be true, as some are already contending, that beer at filling stations means more drunken drivers on highways; if it is found that any considerable number of those engaged in the beer business are seeking to undetermine the state prohibition policy, then a determined effort will be made to repeal the beer law.

If on the other hand the friends of beer shall be able to show that none of the evils here enumerated can justly be attributed to beer the law will stand as it is without serious opposition. That is to say, if beer does not interfere with the enforcement of state prohibition of the liquor traffic, it will not be molested.

It is, therefore, a fair and truthful statement of the case as it stands at present to say that the future of beer in North Carolina depends entirely upon the beer dealers and beer drinkers themselves.—Winston Salem Journal.

Hancock Is Smoked Out.

Representative Frank Handcock came to Winston-Salem one night the past week to make an address before the Junior Chamber of Commerce. During the campaign no one could find out the stand of Hancock on the liquor question but knowing that sooner or later that he would have to give an explanation of how and why he voted he was finally smoked out in his Winston-Salem speech and acknowledged that he voted with the wets. He said:

"Private affairs should not be made public and public affairs should not be made private. As long as I represent this district in Congress, the people will get all the information I can get hold of about their government. Last Tuesday there was an election in North Carolina and I voted for repeal of the 18th Ament. I did so because I believed there must be some better method of controlling whiskey than that now being tried. I have seven children ranging in age from sixteen down to two weeks. I believe in giving the children a square deal in education and enviroment. I believe that if some definite substitute plan for handling liquor had been proposed to the people, they would have voted for repeal. It is clearly apparent that the sentiment of the people of the state for the 18th Amendment is overwhelming."

Hancock is just like the other politicians who guessed wrong. He thought the state would go wet and he would be riding on the front seat along with Bailey, Reynolds, Ehringhaus, Bob Doughton and the rest of the Democratic politicians who guessed wrong and are now in a middle of a fix.

If Hancock has a better method of controlling the liquor question why doesn't he give it to the people? Many there were who said that liquor must be controlled and voted like Hancock, wet, yet offered no solution.—Union Republican.

Gives Up Big Job.

Something went wrong Somewhere in Washington and Henry Burke, for eight years assistant director of the state budget came back to Raleigh the past week after serving 18 days as budget director for the federal agricultural adjustment administration in Washington. All Burke would say was that he didn't like the Washington job. It paid him $10,000 a year salary.

Make Resolves Effective.

The board of temperance and social service of the Western North Carolina Methodist Conference included in its report, adopted by the Conference, the following paragraph:

The negro just now is beset by another danger. His path is forever shadowed by dark designs of cruel men. These designs encompass death itself, with or without provocation. Lynching is all the more degrading because men of depraved appetites, and in mass movement, commit murder with impunity. Most men who Most men who engage in mob action are cowards at heart and in union with the mob do thise wicked things which craven fear inhibits the individual.

The negro isn't "just now" beset with the danger of mob murder. That danger has confronted him since slavery was abolished and in former times was much greater than now. But let that pass. The report is written in plain language, as it should be. It states the bold facts. Lynching gives persons of depraved spirit the opportunity to commit murder with impunity. They are not moved by the virtue of giving protection to society. They lack the courage to longer bring that pretense into the open. It is the viciousness that calls for blood and attempts to satisfy the craving to kill only because it is believed there is safety in numbers and the type of victim picked. The cowardice of the mob is glaring because it picks on the humble and the defenseless, the killings that are not expected to bring reaction, and on those its members know will get full punishment if lefts to the courts.

Whenever a mob has the courage to pick on a white man of prominence and influence who has committed an aggravated crime, and who because of his influence is likely to escape the penalty in part if not in whole, then we will believe that the mob murderers have some purpose to see that justice is done and not until then. That isn't going to happen because the mob murderers haven't the courage. When the Ku Klux and other similar organizations undertake to regulate public morals, as they do in localities when these organizations are in flower, they always pick on the humble and friendless who would be adequately punished by the courts. Citizens of standing, of prominence, may be guilty of the most outrageous conduct but they are left alone. Mobs are afraid to take on those who may be able to do something to them in return.

Passing resolutions is all right but that accomplishes nothing if the passing is all. Church bodies who take such action as this Western North Carolina Conference are to be commended. But the members of the Conference, the bishops and clergy and the lay, can make these resolutions mean something if they will at all times denounce mob action, in their own communities, as it is denounced in the resolutions. Much progress has been made in restraining mobs and most of it, we believe it but truth to say, has been the result of sentiment created by the newspapers. Generally speaking the newspapers do not hesitate to denounce the crimes of the mobs. But too often the churches and organizations that might be expected to help take it out in passing resolutions if they do anything.—Statesville Daily.

New Game Warden.

A better position than that of game warden has been found for T. A. Finley, son of Judge T. B. Finley, of North Wilkesboro, and H. G. Minton, of Ferguson, for many years game warden for Wilkes county, has been given a place with the Roosevelt sapling army at Purlear.

Milton was for several years game warden and was said to have made a good officer but Finley wanted his job and he had to go.—Ex.

The democrats who voted for Al Smith in 1928, are now busy apologizing for voting for him, and are also cussing him out. We didn't vote for Al in 1928, and have no apologies to make.

The democratic newspapers are claiming credit for the C. C. C. Camps throughout the country. Well, they are welcome to the credit, if any. We don't know which is the worst evil of the two—the C. C. C. or the "Piddler's Aid."

Several weeks ago one of our friends, whose name we can't remember, invited us to visit him and he would make us a present of some fine cherry wine. Will the said gentleman get in communication with us at the earliest possible moment

Up to this hour several Republicans are still hanging on to post office jobs throughout the state. Just why James Farley hasn't put them out and installed good democrats, we can't imagine. Maybe the mills of the gods do grind slow but exceedingly fine

We are wondering how Gilliam Grissom, former Federal collector in North Carolina, voted in the recent election? Mr. Grissom was billed to make a speech at High Point some time before the election, but if we are not mistaken, he refused to make a speech until after the election.

Several of president Roosevelt's closest friends and advisers have resigned their jobs and got out from under. They cannot endorse the president's stand on various matters. When Wilson was president four or five of his cabinet resigned for similar reasons, if we are not mistaken.

And now it is said by those who know, that the beer tax in North Carolina will bring in about a half million dollars for the first year if the folks will keep on drinking the stuff. Who was it that got up in the legislative halls in Raleigh last spring and declared that the beer tax would bring us a million and a half dollars annually? We know the man. Our guess then was a half million dollars.

Prices of farm products are a good deal higher this fall than they were a year ago, but many farmers claim that they are in worse shape financially this year than they were last. Cotton farmers say that it takes a third more cotton at the advanced price, to buy a pair of overalls or a bolt of Father George sheeting Th price of everything the farmer buys has gone up more in proportion than the articles he has to sell.

Congressman Walter Lambeth of this district, and Congressman Frank Hancock, of the fifth district, lined up with the wet crowd and voted to legalize the sale of liquor in North Carolina. We are wondering how the dry democrats in these districts will vote in the June primary next year when these two vets ask to be returned to Washington to represent dry North Carolina. We will watch the columns of the Winston Journal and Sentinel, and see if they are as dry during the coming six months as they were during the past six months.

The week before Thanksgiving we printed what we thought was a strong and fetching appeal to all our subscribers who were owing us to send in their renewal. Something went wrong, but we don't know what it was. The Roosevelt prosperity hasn't yet arrived, or the folks don't give a darn whether they pay or don't pay. A similiar appeal ten years ago would have brought us at least ten times as much cash. There are some folks who can't pay, some who can pay and a large number who never do today what they can put off until next week, next month or next year. To those few who responded to our appeal we wish to extend our thanks and make our best bow. Try to pay us before Christmas if possible

Bragging On Davie.

Mr. J. F. Kurfees, a good friend of The Davie Record, who is president of the J. F. Kurfees Paint Co, Louisville, Ky., writes us as follows, under date of Nov. 24:

Dear Mr. Stroud:—I clipped and handed to a friend of mine, Mr. P. H. Callahan, who is an ardent dry, the report appearing in The Davie Record of November 15th, on the election results in Davie county. He was so well pleased with it, that he had a number of copies written, which he is using as inserts in his outgoing mail mostly of course to his dry friends, as he knew they would be interested in such fine results from one county.

Yours very truly,
I F. KURFEES.

We are all proud of the publicity that little Davie has received on account of the big dry majority piled up in the recent election Thank you, Mr. Kurfees, for your kind words. The Record appreciates them very much.

SYNOPSIS

A pretty young woman finds herself in a taxicab in New York with a strange man who addresses her endearingly and speaks of "an awful shock." When he leaves her for a moment at a drug store she drives on, for she fears him. She stops at the Biltmore, still wondering who she is. Her memory is gone. From her expensive clothing she concludes she is married to a wealthy man.

Then the face of the only man she now knew flashed before her. The man in the taxicab. Her reverie ended abruptly. She turned into the ladies' room, saying fervently, "But oh—perhaps—perhaps—after all that man wasn't my husband!"

Then she saw herself in the mirror. And everything else faded from her mind because though she saw with relief that she was young and pretty, that she was well dressed and had an air of smartness, not one flicker came into her mind of any kind of recollection. She could not even decide whether she had ever seen herself before or not. But she was certainly feeling better. She stood and gazed and gazed deep into her own eyes.

"Well, you'll know yourself the next time you see yourself, Girlie," said a voice. "But if you haven't anything to do for the rest of the day would you let me take a crack at that mirror for a minute?"

She turned.

A girl was grinning at her. A rakish dashing girl with lips a lively red.

"Hello," she faltered. Perhaps this girl was her friend.

"Move over, Cutie." The stranger's violet eyes were ringed with mascara. Her pretty lids were painted blue. "Got something in my eye and this is the only mirror I can get close to." She edged in and pulled competently at her lashes.

"That's a shame," said the nameless girl sympathetically. She wanted to shout: Do you know me? What's my name?

The new girl fished a speck of black out of her eye. "There. That's that!" She stood back and eyed herself with critical admiration.

The nameless girl watched with a friendly eye, hoping that the newcomer's greeting had meant a former acquaintance. But the girl took no further notice of her for the moment.

The nameless girl took off her gloves to wash her hands. There was the wedding ring again. She thought: Wedding rings are usually inscribed on the inside. She drew it off and began to examine it.

She found the inscription:

"H. L. V. to D. M. May 19th, 1932."

H. L. V. to D. M. The bridegroom would be H. L. V. And he had given the ring to the bride, D. M. And on their wedding day which was May 19, 1932.

She examined the ring wonderingly, turning it in her fingers.

The other girl spoke again. This time her voice held a note of humorous sarcasm.

"You're lucky that way, too!"

"Lucky?"

"Yeh! Got a wedding ring. I'm that way, too." Her husky voice grew more satirical. "Lucky, lucky. How do I get so lucky?"

"You don't sound as if you liked being married." The nameless girl spoke disinterestedly.

"Do I look crazy?"

"Not at all. Tell me—" The nameless girl paused. She wanted to ask if this talkative woman had ever seen her before. But it was hard to find the proper words. Such a question would seem very odd. She fingered her ring thoughtfully. May Nineteenth? She wondered how long ago that was. "Do you know the date today, by any chance?" she asked finally.

"Do I know the date? Ask me?"

"I do ask you."

"She asks me. She asks me the date. Ask me now if I can forget it. The answer is no. No, I can't." She sighed. She was rubbing some blue paste carefully into her upper eyelid. "Excuse me, Girlie, for inflicting my dismal personal life on you, but you asked me the date. The date is 'der tag.' Get it—der tag!"

"I'm afraid I don't."

"You wouldn't. It's just one of those things."

"The day—"

"The day I say good-by to all this. The day the big fight starts. And believe me, it's going to be a good old war while it lasts. The day, in words of one syllable, that I go off to prison."

"Prison!"

"Yeh. But I don't mean what you mean. I'm going to be a bird in a gilded cage, dearie, see? But, excuse me, you asked me for the date, didn't you—it's the nineteenth.

"Not May—Not May the nineteenth!"

The talkative girl swung around, and put her hands on her hips. Her expression was a little sarcastic. "Now listen. No kidding! Do you think it's December the nineteenth? It's May the nineteenth, Girlie, and—" She went on talking but her audience was no longer listening. She was thinking. This was the nineteenth of May and—her wedding day.

She looked once more into the mirror. Her eyes were starry with excitement. Besides the varnished face of the other girl she looked very young and very beautiful, but she was not thinking of that now. She was thinking that some of the pictures of her jig-saw puzzle past were beginning to fit in. She had been married that day to the man in the cab. She hated him. The shock of marrying him had made her lose her memory, and no wonder.

She was grateful to the strong enclosing walls around her for shielding her from that man. She was grateful to the city for being so big and impersonal that she could lose herself in it. All she needed now was to rest quietly until her memory returned.

Her action in leaving that man had been purely instinctive. But she was glad that she had done it. Still, she wondered, was it as simple as it now seemed? She married a man she hated and then lost her memory because he was so horrible, and then had left him. She was not satisfied. It seemed too easy an explanation. Why had she married him? She would have to find him again sooner or later and tell him that she must divorce him. She could do that at Reno—for this strange chatty girl to whom she had scarcely been listening was talking about Reno.

"If I had the dough, Baby, believe me I'd be on my way to Reno right now."

"It's easy to get a divorce in Reno, isn't it?"

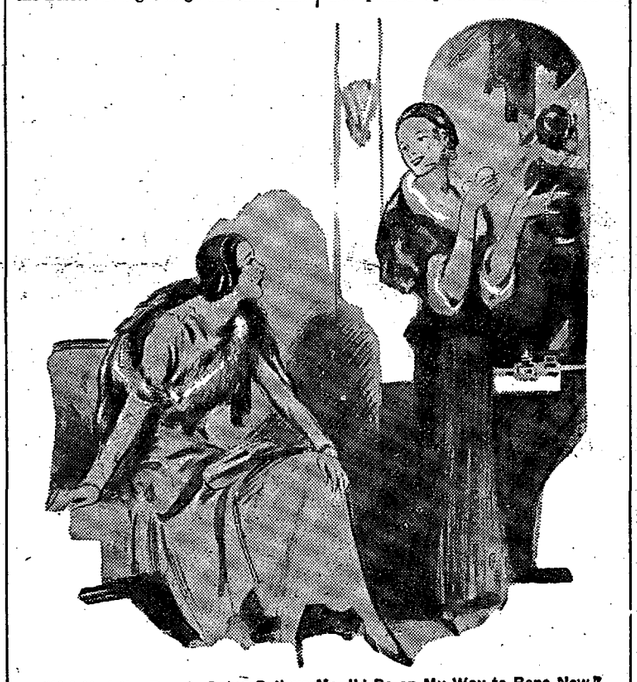

"If you have the dough! But that's a big if, Girlie."

"How much does it cost?"

"About a thousand dollars, including the trip and everything, but I know a girl who did it for seven hundred and fifty. She had a friend living out there, and her living expenses didn't cost her anything."

"It doesn't take very long, does it?"

"It takes exactly six weeks. Oh ask me anything about Reno. I know. I've been studying up on it like it was the Bible. You got to go out there and establish a residence, stay there six weeks, then file your suit. . . ."

As she talked the nameless girl was wondering. It was a little fantastic to be thinking of Reno when she did not yet know for certain that she was unhappily married. Could it be possible that the man in the cab was not her husband? Surely in a few moments she would be able to remember about herself, and when she did there would be time enough to make plans.

"So it's actually the nineteenth of May today."

"H—l, yes. There you go again."

The nameless girl slipped her wedding ring slowly back on her finger.

The girl in the blue coat winked. "Not so crazy about it, eh—well, there are a good many like you, Baby. Believe me, there's a lot like you that can't seem to see the charm in the old cottage for two stuff with the roses or what have you around the door." She leaned over and examined the nameless girl's ring more closely. "It's not a bad little item to hock," she said.

"I think I'll throw it down the first sewer I come to," said the nameless girl.

The woman grew kindly and fervent. "There's always Reno," she said. She became thoughtful. "If that cheap-skate husband of mine weren't so d—n stingy—Baby, there's always Reno, if you have the dough. And you seem to have plenty!"

"You mean I could get a divorce?" said the nameless girl.

"It's easy in Reno—specially for a girl like you with plenty of cash."

The woman's eyes had dropped to the open hand bag on the dressing table. The nameless girl wondered if she could divorce a man whose name she did not know.

"Reno!" said the girl in the blue coat. "G—d! And if you knew what I have got to go through you wouldn't hesitate." She rambled on in a tone that was full of a resentment and self-pity. The nameless girl paid little heed. Again she noticed the woman's eyes on the bills that were visible in her purse.

Now it occurred to her to count them and find how much she had. As she did so a silence fell over the small room of which the two were for the moment the only occupants.

There were nine hundred dollars in bills. And something under ten dollars in her coin purse.

She closed her purse, and as she did so, she was aware of a certain tenseness in the atmosphere. She turned her head to stare at the other girl, and she could have sworn that as she did so the woman turned away as if to give the impression that she had not been watching the younger one. Her former friendliness was washed from her face, but there was a watchfulness in the lines of the figure that the nameless girl could not understand. Perhaps the other girl did know her. Perhaps that was why she had spoken. And perhaps the lack of response in the nameless girl had offended her.

So she reasoned, not in any way connecting the girl's sudden change with the large roll of bills she had shown.

"I've met you some place, haven't I?" she said at last half timidly.

But the other girl no longer wanted to talk. "Doubt that," she said briefly.

The nameless girl saw a towel rack and a row of washstands in an adjoining room. She rose and went in, leaving hat and purse on the tiny dressing table.

Her feeling of depression had now completely lifted. She was separated from a man she hated. She was in a comfortable hotel. She had plenty of money. She would make up a name, register under it, and try to get a good rest.

She washed her hands in warm water. Then she let ice water chill her wrist and hands, thinking that the shock might restore her memory. A cold shower would be even better, she thought almost happily. She looked thoughtfully in the glass. She was completely alone. Yet somewhere surely she must have friends. Perhaps they were looking for her now. She smiled. She would remember. Of course she would remember.

She turned to go into the outer room. The girl was gone.

She went to the small dressing table and picked up her hat and fitted it slowly on her head. Then she looked for her purse, made the gesture of picking it up, and found that her fingers slid over the smooth surface of the dressing table only. The purse was not there.

It was not on the floor. It was not in the room.

She walked out into the lobby once more. It was evident that the girl had taken it, but she was nowhere to be seen.

CHAPTER II

When you have just lost your name, your family (if any) and your whole collection of remembrances of your early life, the disappearance of nine hundred dollars does not seem as important to you as it would under ordinary circumstances.

Annoyance was her strongest emotion as she walked toward her luggage. It did not occur to her to try to follow the thief. Her mind was still too dazed. Her consciousness was filled with loss. The money seemed only part of the general wiping out of possessions.

But now as she neared her bags she saw that a fat little woman was apparently trying to take possession of them. Waving pudgy little hands in the air, she was addressing the bellboy in charge of them.

"But naturally, I will take charge of the baggage!"

The woman's voice was low and commanding, and it had more than a trace of a foreign accent. She shrugged her round shoulders as she spoke in a way that none but a French woman could do. "Oh my G—d. But he is stupid! The bags must go immediately to my car."

The bellboy was unwilling to let them go.

The girl hurried forward. "I'm sorry," she said to the little foreign woman, "but I believe the bags are mine!"

PAUL IN CESAREA

LESSON TEXT—Acts 24:10-23.

GOLDEN TEXT—And herein do I exercise myself, to have always a conscience void of offense toward God, and toward men. Acts 24:16.

PRIMARY TOPIC—A Returned Missionary.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Prisoner Before a King.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—How to Have a Good Conscience.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Christ's Way of Life.

I. Paul Tarrying in Philip's House (Acts 21:8-14). He was bound for Jerusalem. On his journey thither he took up his abode with Philip who had so successfully wrought as an evangelist in the early days of the church. While entertained in this home, Agabus, by symbolic act using Paul's girdle, portrayed the binding of Paul at Jerusalem. The meaning of the words of the disciples at Tyre is to be understood in the light of the Spirit's revelation through Agabus. To the Tyrian disciples the Spirit made known the fact that suffering awaited Paul. To Agabus the Spirit made known what kind of suffering. The same Spirit made known to Paul what awaited him at Jerusalem and sent him forward into it.

II. Paul before Felix (Acts 24:1-27).

1. Paul arrested in Jerusalem (Acts 21:18-40). Paul, at the advice of the elders of the church of Jerusalem, took a Jewish vow in order to conciliate the Jews. Even if it did conciliate the Jewish brethren, it greatly enraged the unbelieving Jews, inciting them to mob Paul. On the basis of supposition these maddened Jews dragged him from the temple and beat him unmercifully, intending to put him to death.

2. Paul accused (Acts 24:1-9). Paul is now in the hands of Felix who determined to hear his case after his accusers had come from Jerusalem. The case against him was formally presented by Tertullus, a Roman lawyer. The charge contained four counts:

(a) A pestilent fellow (v. 5). This would indicate a fellow utterly base and corrupt—a plague.

(b) An inciter of rebellion (v. 5). This they hoped would bring him into conflict with the Roman power.

(c) The ringleader of a sect (5). The aim in this charge was to throw contempt and suspicion upon the Christians, thereby bringing Paul into deeper trouble.

(d) Profanity of the temple (v. 6). In this charge they wilfully suppressed facts.

3. Paul defends himself (vv. 10-21). This defense is a superb example of the strength and dignity of a man whose life is actuated by a noble purpose. Observe:

(a) Paul's frankness and courtesy (v. 10). He freely recognized the fact that Felix had been ruler long enough to be able to form a just judgment, and assumed that Felix would render a decision on the basis of facts.

(b) Charge of sedition denied (vv. 11, 12). He showed the utter falsity of the charge on the ground of the shortness of time, and also on the ground of his conduct while in the temple, even challenging proof of their accusation.

(c) Charge of heresy (vv. 14-16). This he met by a concession and a denial. He admitted that he was of this "way" which they called heresy, but denied that Christians were heretics. He showed that his actions were in keeping with the Hebrew religion, worshiping the same God, believing in the same Scriptures and had the same hope of a coming resurrection of the dead.

4. Felix trembles before Paul (vv. 22-27). Wicked as was Felix, Paul's manner won his favor though it did not secure the apostle's release.

III. Paul before Agrippa (Acts 25:26).

The occasion of his appearing before Agrippa was the visit of Agrippa and Bernice to Festus. More than two years had elapsed since the trial before Felix. During this time the Jewish hatred for him had not abated. Upon the arrival of these guests they expressed a desire to hear Paul. Before these distinguished personages Paul boldly witnessed. The gospel should be preached to all, regardless of wealth or station in life. As a result of Paul's defense Agrippa was almost persuaded.

Ideals

As we advance into life, out of larger experience of the world and of ourselves, are unfolded the ideals of what will be possible to us if we make the best use of the world and of ourselves taken as we are.

Greatest of Mistakes

The greatest mistake which Christians have ever made is in thinking that charity is the beginning and the middle and the end of all religion. It is the end, as peace is the end of war. It is not the beginning.

More Necessary

When we want to make anything a success in worldly affairs we put our whole heart into it. And is this not much more necessary in the service of an holy God? Is he not worthy?

NEAREST TO IT

She shut off the gramophone and turned excitedly to her father.

"Dad," she exclaimed, "that is the latest kind of jazz record. Did you ever hear anything so wonderful?"

Father, who had been trying to read his evening paper, grunted.

"No," he replied wearily. "I can't say I have, although I once heard a collision between a wagon load of empty cans and a farm-cart filled with ducks."—Montreal Star.

Important Question

Herbert had observed that his mother's friend was fond of smoking.

Recently the lad visited the hospital to call on the mother and her week-old baby. While giving the baby the onceover the lad inquired:

"Does she like to smoke?"

Something Classical?

Musician (after much pressing)—Well, all right, since you insist. What shall I play?

Host—Anything you like. It is only to annoy the neighbors.—Buen Humor (Madrid).

His Foot in It

Mrs. Ayres (gushingly)—Do you know, Mr. Bootle, I'm often mistaken for my daughter.

Mr. Bootle (gallantly)—By Jove! Fancy you having a daughter as old-looking as you are.

Temporarily "Out"

"So your maiden aunt lost her head completely when she found a man in her room."

"Yes, she cried for help."

RESOURCEFUL

The bachelor was paying his recently married friend a visit.

"Well," said the latter, after they had inspected the flat, "what do you think of it?"

"Pretty good," praised the bachelor; "but there's one thing that has struck me as rather strange. Why did you choose a flat with such a tiny kitchen?"

The married man winked artfully.

"You're the first man I've told this to, so keep it quiet," he whispered. "It's so small that I can't get in there to help my wife when she's doing the washing-up."

Gave Him the Works

The new office boy had been instructed how to answer callers. Just before noon a man asked, "Is the boss in?"

"Are you a salesman, a bill collector or a friend of his?" the boy inquired.

"All three," was the answer.

"Well, he's in a business conference. He's out of town. Step in and see him."

Child's Version

A judge's little daughter, who had attended her father's court for the first time, was very much interested in the proceedings. After her return home she told her mother:

"Papa made a speech, and several other men made speeches to 12 men who sat all together, and then these 12 men were put in a dark room to be developed."—Montreal Star.

Eighteen and—

She wanted to be a private secretary. She was neither young nor pretty. She answered an ad.

"And how old are you, Miss Neill?" the manager asked.

"Oh," she replied with a blush, "I have seen 18 happy summers."

"What an unhappy life you must have led!" he exclaimed sympathetically.—Tit-Bits.

Business Men, Bankers and Others Assail President's Monetary Policy—Russia Recognized, Envoys Named—Welles to Leave Cuba Soon.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

AMERICAN business, as represented by the Chamber of Commerce of the United States, is now out in open opposition to President Roosevelt's monetary policy. The board of directors of that nation-wide organization, which is headed by Henry I. Harriman of Boston, adopted a resolution declaring that the President's course was gravely retarding business recovery and re-employment, undermining the government's credit, preventing the expansion of normal credit and prolonging the demoralization of foreign trade—in other words, doing just the opposite of what Mr. Roosevelt hopes it will do. The directors demanded of the administration "complete avoidance of monetary experimentation, greenbackism and fiat money."

President Roosevelt

Until this time the chamber has been supporting the President and Mr. Harriman has been active in promoting the aims of the administration. He attended the meeting of the board, as did P. W. Litchfield, president of the Goodyear Tire and Rubber company; Redfield Proctor, president of the Vermont Marble company; Paul Shoup, vice president of the Southern Pacific railroad; Chester I. Barnard, president of the New Jersey Bell Telephone company, and nearly all the rest of the 52 directors.

Besides attacking the President's monetary policy, the board adopted three other resolutions of similar tenor. One protested against the expenditure of large sums by the public works administration for financing projects in competition with private business enterprises which are now rendering adequate service at reasonable cost.

Another protested against the public works administration's plan to engage in the building of federal housing projects, and insisted that such financing should be through private housing corporations.

In a resolution on the NRA, the chamber urged that industrial codes should be administered through the trade associations of each industry.

AS HAD been expected, Prof. O. M. W. Sprague, special adviser to the treasury, resigned, and in doing so he told the President, once his pupil at Harvard, that the Roosevelt dollar depreciation policy not only will fail to raise prices substantially in the absence of trade recovery but will ruin the credit of the government and precipitate an inflation panic. "I believe," Sprague said in his letter, "you are faced with the alternative either of giving up the present policy or of the meeting of government expenditures with additional money."

Prof. O. M. W. Sprague

Having finally lost all hope that the President might be persuaded to change his course before it is too late, Professor Sprague said he was resigning to take the field against the Roosevelt policy, believing that the last chance of averting a currency inflation debacle lies in arousing public opinion.

Another of the President's financial advisers, though unofficial, James P. Warburg, New York banker, joins with Sprague in protest against the present monetary policies. Like the professor, he will undertake to arouse public opinion against them. This he announced at a meeting of the American Academy of Political Science in Philadelphia. At the same meeting Prof. Irving Fisher, Yale economist, said the President's monetary policy was "substantially right"; and Senator Thomas of Oklahoma asserted that he was opposed to inflation, which will cause general surprise.

Members of the advisory council of the federal reserve board, composed of prominent bankers in each federal reserve district, met in Washington and adopted a resolution favoring the re-establishment of the currency on a gold basis, together with safeguards to be agreed upon by international action. The resolution was circulated privately among all the member banks in the federal reserve system.

ACTING Secretary of the Treasury Morgenthau replied to criticisms by saying that "the credit of the United States is as good as the Rock of Gibraltar"; but at the same time he let it be known that, in order to bolster up the prices of government securities, which have been dropping, the Treasury department itself would buy federal bonds with some of its surplus funds.

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT'S answer to these protests against his policies, as obtained by Washington officials who communicated with him at Warm Springs, was to direct that the program of depreciating the dollar for the purpose of raising commodity prices be continued.

The action of the chamber was coincident with the delivery of an address by Mr. Roosevelt at Savannah, Ga., in which he denounced the critics of his recovery program as "tories" and "doubting Thomases" and warmly defended the "experiments" he is making. He promised that "the principles and objectives of American self-government will remain the same."

Washington correspondents said that an ambitious second-stage reconstruction program was being formulated there for the President in his absence. Important features of this plan are sound money on a devalued gold standard; a balanced budget to come from proceeds of a devaluation, liquor monopoly and other "painless" revenues; a revived foreign trade on parity currency and real progress in resumption of foreign debt collections.

Seizing upon the appellation used by the President, critics of his course have organized the Association of American Tories and it is gathering many members. The originators of the association decided they should have a king for their President, so they selected for that post Rufus King, a well-known author.

SECRETARY of the Interior Ickes, as public works administrator, announced that he had turned $100,000,000 over to the new federal housing corporation that is undertaking slum clearance work in cities throughout the country. The undertaking, he said, would be started in Detroit with a model housing project.

RESUMPTION of diplomatic relations with Russia and the recognition of the Soviet government came, as was expected, on the eve of the President's departure for Warm Springs. He and Commissar Litvinov issued a joint announcement of the happy ending of their negotiations, and Mr. Roosevelt immediately designated William C. Bullit as American ambassador to Moscow, which greatly pleased the Russians. Within a day or so the Soviet government announced that its ambassador to Washington would be Alexander Antonovich Troyanovsky, formerly diplomatic representative at Tokyo and now vice chairman of the Russian state planning commission. This gentleman was born in Russia in 1882, studied in the University of Kiev, was exiled to Siberia in 1909, escaped and lived in France until 1917, and served in the Russian revolutionary army.

A. A. Troyanovsky

With recognition by our government, Russia agrees not to allow its agents to propagandize against the government of the United States; guarantees religious freedom and legal protection for American nationals in Russia, and waives all claims against the United States growing out of the American expedition into Siberia in 1918-21. No promise whatever was made by Mr. Litvinov concerning the attitude of his government toward the payment of $768,583,000 in debts owed by Russia to the United States government and to private American citizens.

FOLLOWING his conference with Ambassador Welles in Warm Springs, President Roosevelt issued a formal statement concerning the Cuban situation which was designed to let President Grau know that the United States is not ready to recognize his government and will not do so unless he can persuade the island factions to cease their warring and agree among themselves.

Sumner Welles

The statement reiterated the administration's policy of recognizing any government, regardless of its partisan or factional color, which proved itself representative of its people and able to secure their support. But it was made clear that the present Cuban government, assailed as it has been by one revolutionary attempt after another, did not at present meet these conditions.

Mr. Roosevelt supplemented his statement by the announcement that, though Ambassador Welles would return to his post in Havana after visiting Washington, he would soon be replaced by Jefferson Caffery and would resume his former position as assistant secretary of state for Latin American affairs. This is in full accord with Mr. Welles' desires though he has been unwilling to retire from Havana under the heavy fire directed against him by the supporters of the Grau government. The latter had been organizing a great protest demonstration designed to keep the ambassador from landing at the Havana docks and serious trouble was feared. Mr. Roosevelt's announcement it was hoped would ease this tense situation.

PREMIER ALBERT SARRAUT'S government was upset by the French chamber of deputies by a vote of 321 to 247 due to its insistence on retention of the gold standard and balancing the budget. Its defeat was really brought about by the determination of the unions of civil servants not to submit to any financial sacrifices in the interests of the state. There was a belief in Paris that Edouard Herriot might again be called on to form a new ministry.

SECRETARY OF STATE HULL, who doesn't seem to cut much of a figure in the administration, is to have a new assistant secretary, President Roosevelt appointed to this post Francis B. Sayre, son-in-law of the late President Wilson, and he will succeed Harry F. Payer who has been transferred to the position of special foreign trade adviser to the RFC. Mr. Sayre is a professor in the Harvard law school and will remove from Cambridge to Washington as soon as arrangements can be made with the university.

F. B. Sayre

As adviser on foreign affairs to the government of Siam, Mr. Sayre has had wide experience in the negotiation of political and commercial treaties. Since 1925 he has negotiated treaties between the Siamese government and the governments of France, Great Britain, the Netherlands, Spain, Portugal, Denmark, Sweden, Norway, and Italy. He holds decorations from all of the principal nations of Europe.

LIEUTENANT COMMANDER SETTLE of the navy and Major Fordney of the marines finally found a day of favorable atmospheric conditions and made their long-delayed flight into the stratosphere. Their big balloon ascended from Akron, Ohio, and reached an altitude of 61,237 feet. This beat the existing record by about 8,000 feet, though Russia's stratosphere explorers claimed to have risen above 62,000 feet.

Settle's balloon and aluminum ball came down in a southern New Jersey swamp and the two daring explorers extricated themselves safely and were taken by airplane to Washington where they were received by the secretary of the navy and other officials.

NEWFOUNDLAND is about to lose its status as a British dominion and be demoted to that of a crown colony. This course has been recommended by a royal commission that has been investigating the dominion's tangled financial affairs. The report of this body charges that Newfoundland's debt, which has reached the point where the interest consumes 50 per cent of the state's income, is "largely due to reckless waste and extravagance and to the absence of constructive and efficient administration."

Newfoundland was the first of Great Britain's overseas colonies. Labrador is included in its government, and one of the suggested solutions for the island's difficulties has been to sell Labrador to Canada, paying the public debt with the proceeds.

SEISMOGRAPHS all over the world showed the other day what scientists declared was the greatest earthquake ever recorded. But fortunately it occurred way up toward the North pole, between Greenland and Baffin island where there was nothing to destroy except land formation and no lives to be taken.

ERNEST W. GIBSON, who formerly was a congressman from Vermont, will go back to Washington to represent that state in the senate. He was appointed by Governor Wilson to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Senator Porter H. Dale.

WISCONSIN'S farm strike fizzled out, so it was called off by the heads of the Farm Holiday association and the milk pool. The pickets were all withdrawn and shipments of milk and other farm produce to the markets were resumed. The milk pool leader said another "holiday" probably would be ordered in February.

CHINA seems to be headed for another civil war of major proportions. The famous Nineteenth route army, which defended Shanghai against the Japanese early last year, has revolted against the Nanking government and issued a declaration of independence of Fukien province. It is rumored the army has reached an understanding with the communists in Kiangsi province.

The fact that Fukien's chief political principle is continued opposition to Japan has caused apprehension that it is likely to provoke Japanese intervention. The province contains extensive Japanese interests and is regarded as a Japanese sphere due to its location opposite the Japanese island colony on Formosa.

ON DECEMBER 5 the fascist grand council will be convoked to discuss the question of Italy's membership in the League of Nations, and informed opinion in Rome is that Italy will withdraw from the League unless France consents to the holding of a disarmament conference in Rome under the four-power pact that was engineered by Mussolini. So far the French have refused to participate in any such conference outside of Geneva and the auspices of the League. Three Italian newspapers already have hinted at the possibility of the withdrawal of Italy. One of them is the premier's Popolo d'Italia.

FARM POULTRY

ALL-NIGHT LIGHTS MAY HARM PULLETS

Early Morning Is Best Time for Illumination.

Chickens of all ages and conditions do not respond equally well to artificial illumination, and a lot of discretion is required in attempting to stimulate egg production by night or early morning lights in the poultry house.

Pullets do better under early morning lights. All-night lights are overstimulating and may result in injury to the pullets. Old hens withstand all-night lighting successfully, according to C. M. Ferguson, extension specialist in poultry husbandry for the Ohio State university

With hens it is more a matter of determining when egg production is most wanted. In producing eggs for the market, use lights and delay the period of molt, advises Ferguson. But if eggs are wanted for supplying a hatchery this winter or next spring, it is all wrong to light the poultry house now.

Although lights do not affect the hatchability of the eggs, lights too early result in reducing the supply of eggs in early spring when demand by hatcheries is at its peak.

Most marked results from lighting may be obtained when used immediately after the molting period.

If all-night lights are used on the flock too much intensity should be avoided, according to the poultry specialist. A ten-watt lamp or ordinary barn lantern or gas jet with mantle provides sufficient light. Light should be directed at the feed and water receptacles, he says.

For early morning lights on hens or pullets a 40 or 50 watt lamp with a reflector attached and placed six feet above the floor seems to give best results. It should be illuminated about 4 a. m.

Not All Pullets Worth Space in Laying House

It does not always pay to put every pullet that is raised into the laying house, warns a poultry expert. There are usually a few in every flock that will scarcely pay their board by the end of the year.

Only such pullets as are in good physical condition, as evidenced by a good condition of flesh, bright eye bright red color in comb and wattles, and well-pigmented skin and shanks in yellow colored breeds, such as the Leghorns and American breeds—Plymouth Rocks, Rhode Island Reds, and Wyandottes—should be given a chance in the laying pen. Thin, poorly grown, poorly feathered and undersized birds are not worth bothering with. They should be sent to market if they have any value as food. If not, they should be killed and burned.

All pullets which do not show quite as much development as the others of the flock can be put in a pen by themselves so that they may have a better chance at the feed hoppers. These undeveloped birds that need a little more time to grow are probably underdeveloped because the more vigorous ones have crowded them away from the feed. A proper selection of the pullets right now will undoubtedly increase the efficiency of the flock during the winter laying season.

Poultry Gleanings

Sunflower seed is grown on a commercial scale near Clarendon, Texas, for chicken feed.

Cockerels that are to be kept or sold as breeders should be leg-banded. Young stock not good enough to winter should be marketed.

The Cayuga duck derives its name from Cayuga county, New York, where it was developed about 1850. It resembles the Pekin duck in shape, but is one pound lighter.

Carbohydrates and hydrocarbons are essential in a balanced poultry ration. They are fuel foods. The carbohydrates furnish the starches and sugars and the hydrocarbons supply the fats, either vegetable or animal.

New Hampshire reds, a relatively new breed of chickens, resemble the standard Rhode Island reds.

The use of a good grade of cod-liver oil has proved most beneficial for poultry. Unless the best grades are used, however, its beneficial effects are missing.

Rye is not liked by fowls. If used at all, it should be fed in very limited amounts. Barley, kafir corn and buckwheat are grains that may be used in the ration.

Damp litter in the hen house is likely to result from over-crowding.

A perfectly good, fresh egg shows full and clear before the light; there is almost no air cell at the large end and the yolk outline is only faintly discernible.

It has been stated that it is easier to throw birds out of production by a lack of water than by a lack of feed. Be sure that not only the old birds but also the young growing birds have plenty of clean, pure water.

Washington Digest

National Topics Interpreted by William Bruckart

Washington.—I believe the question most frequently heard in Washington these days is: "Now that we have this new deal, how is it going to be untangled?" And it occurs to me that it is about the most important question before this government today. A chemist can mix constituent parts of a formula or a prescription, but he never can undo what he has done. Thus, while the new deal has not changed the physical characteristics of things, as a chemist would do in mixing a formula, the job of getting this country settled down is one of such magnitude that the untangling of the skein is going to require something more than patience.

Important Question

Consider the farm adjustment program. Or the NRA. Or look into the uprooting of commerce and industry by the various banking changes and currency and gold maneuvers that have taken place. And last, but by no means least, examine the rapidly growing pile of obligations that constitute what we know as our public debt.

With reference to the public debt, it should be stated that this country, after the World war and its devastation and animosities had been shaken off, proceeded to pay off its public debt at an amazing rate. After the end of the war when the debt was at its peak, the government owed a total of $26,550,000,000. It stands today roughly at $23,400,000,000. In between those two dates, when the country was prosperous and income taxes and other taxes were yielding their fullest, the debt once was whittled down to about $16,500,000,000. So those who watch over the public debt say they entertain no fears; that when conditions are prosperous again there will be taxes to pay off the debt and that no one will complain about the vast sums now being spent if the result is prosperity.

This payment of the public debt, however, is to my mind considerably less of a tangle, a problem, with which to deal, than the farm adjustment scheme on which Secretary Wallace and his Agricultural department folks are laboring. It seems likely, from Mr. Wallace's calculations, that the country's acreage of harvested crops next year will be at least 30,000,000, and may be 35,000,000, acres below the average acreage of crops planted and harvested annually in recent years. Emergency adjustment plans are responsible. They are predicated upon a basis contemplating control of production, a restriction against a surplus that would force prices down.

Mr. Wallace is profoundly convinced that this course will be extremely helpful to the farmers. He sees better returns to them and he sees greater peace of mind, which after all is not to be dismissed lightly, among the farm folks of the country.

But that is the immediate picture. What of the future? Or to quote again the oft-repeated question: "how is it going to be untangled?" My own conviction is that in the urge to get some relief out to the farm belt, too little attention has been paid to the future status of the entire commodity production areas of the nation that can be called farm land.

To show how far-reaching the farm adjustment program is, it is only necessary to state that every crop thus far considered is one constituting a "key" in the commodity structure. These key crops—cotton, wheat, corn, etc.—occupy more than 1,900,000,000 acres. To change that layout, Secretary Wallace admits, is just like a game of chess. When you make one move, you are immediately faced with another, and so on.

Like a Game of Chess

By removing wheat as a production from one square mile or one portion of a county, attention must immediately be given to the question of to what use that land can be put. It is obvious that it cannot be allowed to grow only weeds. So there must be a stop-gap crop of some kind, some crop that will not compete with wheat, or with corn or with cotton or the other crops on which production control is being attempted.

As an example, out in western Kansas, they have developed after years of trial and experiment, a new kind of sorghum cane. It is no longer the tall, slender stalk of yore but a short stalk not unlike wheat that has a heavy head of grain, or seed, as you choose to describe it. It can be produced for about 14 cents a bushel, and farmers are flocking to its use. It takes care of the land made vacant by withdrawal of wheat, but it presents a competitor for both wheat and corn.

Or, if the vacant land is turned to grass, you at once start live stock industry to expanding there and the government is trying to hold down live stock production so that those who devote their land to live stock will get a fair return. Such is the story all through the list. It is not easy, and I think any fair-minded person will admit it. No professor, however learned, is going to solve that problem without careful thought and exceedingly cautious moves.

Admitting my own inability to forecast the result and an equal lack of capacity to find anyone who has suggested the answer, I cannot refrain from calling attention to one possibility: the new deal has set out upon a policy that cannot avoid revision of our entire economic structure and, it now appears, it may lead even to a re-settlement of the United States. That means, of course, that folks who devote their lives to live stock raising will have to move to the areas where they can do that, and the corn growers will have to get into that bailiwick, or some such new alignment. I confess I do not know what drastic changes can be accomplished without dislocating the lives and the hopes of farmers, but to me it is a decidedly interesting question over which to ponder as the long winter nights wear on.

The country still seems to be trying to figure out what was the cause of the recent drastic treasury reorganization. The changes came so quickly and without any warning note that it was a move amounting to lightning from a clear sky. And now the observers here are trying to figure out its meaning in the fullest sense.

The Big Puzzle

I watched the country's leading newspapers closely for several days after the President announced that Secretary Woodin was going on a long leave of absence in search of health, that Dean Acheson was resigning as undersecretary, and that Henry Morgenthau, Jr., was being moved over as undersecretary of the treasury, from the post of governor of the farm credit administration. Being undersecretary, he immediately became acting secretary when Mr. Woodin left for Arizona in his search for health. The newspapers were at wide variance on their views. Some of them held, editorially and in their news columns, that inflationists had taken the treasury under their wing and that we were headed straight into the grievous mistake that Germany made on her currency. Others took the position that Mr. Woodin was not a "yes" man and that Mr. Acheson was not in sympathy with the various maneuvers to which Mr. Roosevelt was lending his support, and that the President simply cleaned house.

Whatever the reason was, it remains as much of a secret as ever. The one thing upon which Washington observers seem to agree and the feeling was reflected in many large newspapers, was that Mr. Acheson was the "goat." Mr. Roosevelt wanted Mr. Morgenthau in the treasury and wanted him to run the place while Mr. Woodin was away, and the only way to accomplish it was to get rid of Mr. Acheson. That certainly happened.

The President, in announcing the changes, said it was necessary to have a man of more experience in the treasury than Mr. Acheson since Mr. Woodin was going to be absent.

The President is seeking to develop the government's work relief program so that it will be operating on its most extensive scale coincident with what is logically expected to be the peak of unemployment this winter. His program to add $400,000,000 to the public works funds and take idle persons off the relief rolls for those jobs is well under way. It no doubt will make several million jobs available for a short time at least.

Make Millions of Jobs

It is the President's thought that where persons have been on relief rolls, they will gladly take a job and work regularly if they are paid a little more than the relief doles they were receiving. He contends that people prefer work generally to being fed on a charity basis. And as far as I can learn, no one disputes the idea. Certainly, the person who is working and is being paid for it regains self-respect which so many times is lost when charitable organizations have to care for him and his family.

There is one aspect of the program for making work, however, that seems to have been generally overlooked. The proposition contemplates wide development of roads and highways in all parts of the nation. State road supervisors are going to make and, indeed, are now making, plans and listing projects in the numerous counties where work of a worthwhile nature can be done. This plan places the jobs close to the source of need, right in the locality where men are out of jobs.

While we are discussing the problems of the new deal, it seems pertinent to call attention to how advancement of science in commerce and industry add problems with which the professors must cope. For example, the bureau of fisheries of the Department of Commerce has just discovered a way to make oysters shuck themselves. There are thousands of men, and women, too, who annually add to their incomes by shucking oysters along the rivers and at the ports where the oyster boats come in. The discovery of a method for self-shucking of oysters will throw a good many of them out of jobs this winter, if the plan works as the bureau says it will work.

Curious Laws Once in Force on Isle of Man

At the present time the deemsters are the judges on the Isle of Man, and there are two now existing. In former times they pronounced doom or judgment, and were named deemsters from the Norse Domi. They were formerly elected by the people, and received no salary, but were entitled to a fee from each landowner, to be paid to their collectors, who were known as bonnacks.

The deemster's warrant or summons was simply a stone on which his initials were written and handed to the officer of the court. In this more enlightened age the two deemsters of the island—who are appointed by the lieutenant governor—receive a salary of £1,200 (about $6,000) a year each.

Amongst the old laws were some that were exceedingly curious. One of the most ancient laws arose from the miserable dwellings of the common people. They were without doors or windows, and a person who entered a house without first speaking and saluting the occupier was regarded as a felon.

At one time sheep stealing in the Isle of Man was a capital offense. Not only so, but ordinary thefts were punishable by death, and this was the law until the middle of the last century. A felon's goods were forfeited to the lord of the island, but by a quaint custom the lord's wife was entitled to all the felon's goats—if he had any.

The Graceful Contours of This Boston Windsor Rocker Are Left Revealed When Semi-Upholstered.

SLIP-COVER upholstery is the last word in furniture covers. It is a vogue which plays into the hands of the home decorators, for she can, with her own hands, make these covers, and at small cost. It is a revival of the old-time custom of pioneer days. Then women used to make chair seats and chair backs to put over their favorite windsor rockers. Necessity was the ruling motive, since the winds which howled about the house would seep through the none-too-closely-made foundations and sides of dwellings, and bring cold air into the rooms. Chairs, comfortable enough in summer, were dressed in semi-upholstery for winter, and thus given the needed warmth to add a touch of luxury. Today, while comfort is accented in the modern semi-upholstery, it is decoration which is featured equally.

Slip-cover upholstery can be made by any woman who wishes to cover her chairs or sofas for the welcome warmth the wadded covers provide, or because the covers will protect handsome materials, or hide worn and frayed upholstery. Patterned or plain slip-cover textiles, or glazed chintz, etc., are used and not regular upholstery goods.

Slip-cover patterns can be used, or patterns cut from paper fitted over the chairs themselves. The outer covering pieces should be wadded and lined. Then they are tufted, quilted, or buttoned together at regular intervals over the surface. This can be done when the covers are in sections rather better than after the sections have been seamed together.

How to Make Covers

An easy way to make a semi-upholstered cover for a windsor chair, or one of like character, is to copy the method of our forebears. Cut two pieces of the textile the width and length of the back. Put wadding between them, seam along all edges, tuft with strands of coarse yarn and attach strips of tape at corners. The tapes at top go over the wooden cross piece at top of back, and tie at back of chair or at top edge. The tapes at the other end are tied about the rungs. The back "upholstery" is held securely in place thus. There may or may not be a chair seat, but comfort suggests the making of one. The first thing is to make a cushion to fit the shape and size of the seat of the chair. Then put a cover of the same material as the back upholstery over it. Omit tufting. With back well wadded and cushion well filled with feathers or some substitute, the chair acquires a note of pleasing decoration.

Harvest Moon

The harvest moon is so called because farmers in northern latitudes are able to work in harvest fields until late at night. It shines more brightly in northern Europe and Canada than in the United States. While the harvest moon occurs in the northern hemisphere at mid-September, it occurs in March in the southern hemisphere.

Transportation of the Future?

Many far-seeing engineers envision the railplane as the chief mode of transportation in urban centers of the future. Here is a working model of the latest type of railplane to be perfected in England. Note that the upper wheels of the "plane" are vertical with the ground, while those below are horizontal with the ground. A propeller fore and aft will supply added momentum.

Not Coercion but Co-Operation

By LEONARD A. BARRETT

Whither Bound? A question which, though not frequently uttered, is secretly asked by every student of the national recovery act. Will the gigantic movement already set in motion lead to the return of prosperity? Or, will it result in inflation and, national economic bankruptcy? The question "Whither Bound?" assumes the answer can only come from the government itself. Popular opinion seems to hold the government responsible whichever way the wind blows. An attitude of this sort clearly indicates the superficial type of much of the present-day thinking.

It is so easy to pass on to some other person or to some organization the responsibility which rightly belongs to us. Let it be frankly admitted that the responsibility for the return of prosperity does not rest primarily with the government. No amount of legislation can bring about an economic recovery any more than it can create a permanent peace. All the government can do is to set in motion certain forces intended to create a recovered prosperity. A physician prescribes to the best of his ability the medicine intended to restore the patient's health, but he cannot compel his patient to take the medicine. The fundamental spirit of democracy forbids the slightest act of coercion on the part of the government.

No person by coercion can ever be made moral. The moral imperatives do not by force enter the sanctuary of the human will. True the choice of a wrong motive may result in a serious penalty, but the fact remains, we are left free to choose for ourselves between the moral alternatives in life.

It is not coercion but co-operation that will speed the return of prosperity. The responsibility for the success of the national recovery act rests upon every citizen in every state, city and hamlet in this country. There is no possible substitute for the spirit of mutual co-operation. If every citizen does his part the return of prosperity is reasonably assured. If that responsibility is shifted to some other seat of authority other than the individual conscience, the present efforts of the government are fraught with serious danger and in the minds of many expert economists are doomed to chaos and national disaster. Not coercion but co-operation is the soul of the national recovery act.

Reveal Decline of Studebaker Wealth

Depression Wipes Out Once Big Fortune.

South Bend, Ind.—The decline of the fortunes of the house of Studebaker, once the city's first family, has just been revealed.

In a modest frame house Col. George M. Studebaker and his wife, head of the clan and one-time master and mistress of a great gray-stone castle, are weathering out the lean, depression years.

Gone is the enormous Studebaker fortune, which dated from the time the forbears of the present family started a little wagon factory here, nearly 100 years ago. The millions that piled up when the Studebaker factory turned to the manufacture of automobiles have vanished.

Today the woman who ruled as arbiter of South Bend society and moved in the first social circles of New York and Chicago is living with her husband upon the charity of close friends.

The Studebakers live in a small white-painted house on a quiet South Bend residential street. Mrs. Studebaker, whose hands are more accustomed to pouring tea into dainty cups of porcelain than handling brooms and mops, helps with the daily household routine.

A maid who cooks the meals does most of the housework, but many of the homely tasks fall upon Mrs. Studebaker.

Family Loss Near $6,000,000.

The story of the scars left by the depression upon the Studebaker fortune differs only in degree from that of thousands of typical American families trapped by the treacherous declines of the security markets.

Close friends of the family estimate the losses of Colonel Studebaker and his brother, the late Clement Studebaker, Jr., at about $6,000,000. Most of the loss came in the terrific collapse of the Insull utilities empire, in which the family had a heavy stake.

The Studebakers had been closely allied with Insull in his spectacular rise to fame and power.

A few weeks ago Colonel Studebaker filed a petition in bankruptcy. He showed liabilities of $2,000,000, assets of $2,000 and about $35 in cash. Notes of other investors, which the colonel and his brother signed, added to their heavy losses.

Give Up Palatial Home.

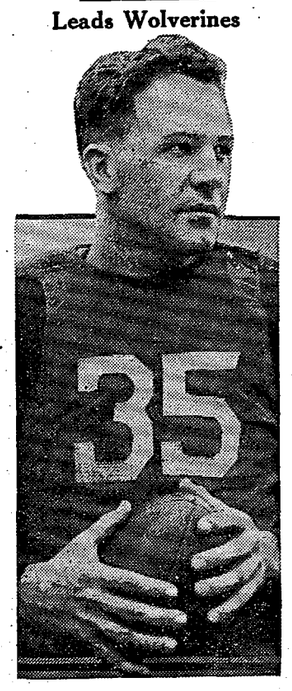

When the bankruptcy action was filed the Studebakers moved from their ancestral home on the knoll at Tippecanoe place. It was a massive, 30-room mansion of stone built by the colonel's father. The antiques and heirlooms of the family were left behind to help satisfy claims of creditors.

At this home the Studebakers had constantly entertained for large groups of friends. In the city the couple was known as kindly and democratic. Comrades of the colonel's Spanish war days were invited to camp on the extensive grounds of the estate.

Now the couple live in strict retirement. They see only a few of their closest friends. But those who have visited the couple in their modest quarters, report them still cheerful and smiling, despite hardships to which they are unaccustomed.

"Folks have been mighty kind," they say. "After all, that's what counts."

Farmer Furnishes Refuge for Snakes

Weatherford, Okla.—A veritable snake's paradise where the reptiles live unmolested and feed on insects and mice in thick underbrush and grass has been established by J. M. Kroeker, a farmer.

None is permitted to disturb the reptiles in their retreat. For more than three years Kroeker has been driving all the snakes he finds on his quarter section of land into the small cottonwood grove.

He kills only rattlesnakes and will allow none of this variety to enter the retreat. Kroeker said that the snakes are invaluable for destroying the mice and insects on his farm and that this fact is his reason for encouraging their presence.

Visitors report that some of the reptiles, particularly the bullsnakes, have attained immense size. Some are said to have been on the farm since Kroeker moved there 30 years ago.

ODD THINGS AND NEW—By Lame Bode

"STINGINESS" NOT TO BE COMPARED WITH DUE THRIFT

"Have you heard the story about the queen of England tearing off unused sheets in her morning mail to use them for note paper?

"It strikes me that's pretty small. It's one thing to be extravagant, another to be stingy. And when it comes to queenliness—well, what do you think about it?"

This question, addressed to a recognized student of life and its ways, was thus answered:

"For my part I cannot see anything 'stingy' in being saving, in abominating waste. Nor anything incompatible with queenliness in husbandry and thrift.

"Stinginess is a quality of meanness that grows out of selfishness. It is a niggardliness toward others because of avariciousness for oneself. The stingy person might quite conceivably be the last one to bother to salvage unused bits of paper, being too selfish to take the trouble. Neither would that person give to charity the huge sums made possible by the personal thrift of the British queen.

"I have seen this quality of being saving and meanness confused before. And confusion it is indeed. For often it is the very self-indulgence of the extravagant which necessitates meanness on their part toward others.

"The most generous woman I have ever known was one of the most frugal and saving. Living for many years on a fixed income, she once said that her only interest in having money was to be free of the frictions engendered by money. And she kept her own needs at such a minimum as always to have the necessary surplus for openhandedness and generosity to others.

"My respect for the queen of England is intensified by the knowledge of her personal husbandry and her well known efforts with her household budget—as well as her many good works which these efforts go to further."

Shady Grove School News.

In general old Shady Grove is coming on fine. Everyone seems to be enjoying school life and there is alwaya fun and laughter to be found; amid the uproar of tests and quizes put on by high school thachers which are forever raging.

There seems to be very much school interest shown by attendace. Our attendance is very good although a definite account of percentage cannot be given here. Special Notice may be given, too, that the Senoir Class of Shady Grove School has lead the school as a whole in attendance for the first three months of the school year. That is, by classes. We, as a Senior Class appreciate the above fact.

Various holidays seem to be approaching. We were out for Thanksgiving the past week and I think most of us, as school children, had something to be thankful for. Don't you? We were out of school for two days. Our next holiday will be Christmas and Christmas Holidays are O. K. but for one reason—they are too short, one week only gives us a wee chance to sample our mother's Christmas cakes Do you not agree? Well, basketball for Shady Grove seems to be improving gradually. After a few days the seats will be removed and the court will be calling for evergetic boys and girls.

We hope to make our school a success "We Are" shall be our motto.

Some More Echoes on Repeal.

Considerable comment and discussion are still to be heard relative to the November 7 election on rebeal of the Eighteenth Amendment.

From certain sources we learn that the election was held to decide only only one question—whether North Carolina favored repeal of the amendment or whether it didn't.

That sounds very pretty—but it isn't so.

North Carolina wasn't particularly interested in the national situation, because everybody knew beforehand that regardless of how this state voted, national repeal was a certainty. This being so, what was the real influence behind the election?

Well—if you want the actual, honest-to-goodnes facts, here they are:

The national influence was of a neglible nature. What we really were voting on was to find out how our state stood on the question of the manufacture, distribution and sale of liquor right here in North Carolina.

"That ain't so!" comes a howl of protest from certain quarters.

But there's no sense in pussy-footing; it IS so.

Before the main events are run off in certain races, they usually stage what are known as "heats." The election on November 7 was in the nature of a "heat." The Drys won won that heat by an overwhelmingly large margin. It was a decisive victory, and although this publication was—and still is—wet in sentiment, we're willing to admit the real significance and meaning of that vote.

It means that no one need try and tamper with North Carolina's liquor laws for the next five or six years, unless he wants to get his head knocked off—politically.

There's the sum and substance of the whole thing.—The State.

Which Roosevelt.

Fifty years from now, when they mentioned the name of Roosevelt, it will be asked, "Which Roosevelt, the 100 per cent. American Roosevelt or the 3.2 per cent. beer Roosevelt?"—Dr, Clarence True Wilson.

If "Florella" means "little flower," New York's new mayor, come four years more, may be regarded as a shrinking violet —Ex.

Gavin Says Vote Not Party Victory.

Sanford.—E. L. Gavin, former United States district attorney, and one of the most prominent Republicans in North Carolina, who was active in the campaign for retension of the 18th amendment, when asked for a statement said. "The overwhelming majority return of Tuesday's election in favor of the retention of the 18th amendment is not a victory for either political party, but is only an expression of the deep rooted and abiding conviction of the people of North Carolina for which no party, church, individual or group is entitled to the credit. All worked and co-operated together for a common cause and the state as a whole should receive the glory.

Let us be thankful for religion. It provides one way to save the farmer without soaking the taxpayer.

"NECESSITY IS THE MOTHER OF INVENTION"

Every farmer knows he must keep his produce dry on the way to market. But a good canvas cover costs money and Mr. J. T. Koonce of Kinston, N. C., has found a way to save this expense. He uses the moisture-proof bags in which Arcadian Nitrate of Soda is packed to make a sturdy, protective "canvas" as shown in the above picture.

He says: "In addition to getting better crops from Arcadian Nitrate of Soda, by using the bags, I get a good, serviceable truck cover which costs me nothing."

Would Establish More Offices.

Something has been said about increasing the state wide patrol when the 18th amendment is repealed to have these men assist in keeping out the rum-runners from other states.

Captain Charles D. Farmer, head of the state patrol system from his swivel chair in his Raleigh office has already come forth with the suggestion that the highway force be increased from 67, the present number, to 500 men. Bravo! This will give 433 Democratic patriots jobs instanter and doubtless increase the stipend of Captain Farmer

It is not necessary to wait until the Legislature meets to increase the patrol. Czar Jeffress can do this with a stroke of the pen like he did two years ago when he defied the legislature and almost doubled the size of the patrol when they expressly told him he could not do it and voted down the proposed increase.

The federal government has been pledged to protect dry states from rum runners and bootleggers. Haven't the state of North Carolina and South Carolina any faith in President Roosevelt? The tier of counties to the north of us, in Virginia, are dry, the tier of counties west of us, in Tennessee, are dry, South Carolina is dry, we have sheriffs, deputy sheriffs, constables and policemen bp the dozens in all the counties so why an extra patrol force if not just a scheme to give 433 more Democrats a political job? Down with such a position.—Union Republican.

Another Prop Jarred.

One of the reasons by which staunch defenders of capital punishment have long propped their cause is that it is a necessity for the protection of womanhood against rape And this has been hard to answer here in the South in particular, with little serious efforts made in any Southern state to take the state out of the busines of killing human beings.

Consequently an observer might have been given something of a shock in superior court here last week. A special venire had been summoned from which to select twelve to try a young man on a rape charge, a capital offense under the laws of all Southern states, and in most other states as well. The venire was composed of a group of men who apparently averaged high in intelligence. Yet man after man of them expressed opposition to the death penalty on a rape charge. Some qualified this by saying they were opposed particularly where younger people are involved.

Perhaps the thing that caused so of these thoughtful citizens to express opposition to this item in the catalogue of capital crimes is that most charges of the sort are not fully supported by the evidence. It is a rare thing indeed that a white man is put to death for criminally assaulting a white woman in North Carolina, or a negro man for criminally assaulting a negro woman. Presumably, no white man has ever been convicted in the state for criminally assaulting a negro woman. This leaves only one combination, negro man and white woman. And the truth of it is that here after all is the only reason why the death penalty continues to stand against rape —The Dispatch

There's nothing new. Early settlers also sold guns to the savages who slaughtered them. Robert Quillen.

"Rubber dollars" might be desirable if we could stretch them sufficiently to make ends meet.

The difficulty about the laws with teeth is that they are too soon dulled for lack of use.

There isn't and there never will be a substitute for brains.

Mere Moonshine.

Jouett Shouse declares that saloons should sell intoxicants by the drink so that men may stand up and and drink. He should have added women, too. For women are not what they used to be in the days of the old saloon. They have achieved for themselves a new freedom in this county in the last fifteen years.

Both at work and at play, wherever men go today women are also sure to go. Saloons where men can stand up and drink will inevitably mean saloons where women can also stand up and drink.

But that is not the point of this editorial. The point is that Jouett Shouse is now advocating saloons For this is the same Mr. Shouse who a year ago, as chairman of the Association Against the Prohibition Amendment, was solemnly assuring the American people that if they would repeal the Eighteenth Amendment the saloon never would be permitted to return to curse the land. But his promise and pledges have turned out to be mere moonshine.

We newspapers of the country commended Mr. Shouse at that time and heartily concurred in his pledge that the saloon would not be brought back after repeal, but said some other and highly improved method of handling liquor would be inaugurated. That was mere moonshine, too.

The New York Times, one of the wettest of the wets, now declares that New York wants the saloon and is going to have it. It even goes so far as to advocate a resort to lawlessness to secure the saloon. The Times says:

"If they (those who wish greater regulation) insist on making it their business—well, most of us know where the speakeasies are, and we can carry on the same old Whiskey Rebellion against Albany that we carried on so long against Washington."

Those who were credulous enough to vote for repeal because they thought the wets would keep their promise not to bring back the saloons are in for a sad awakening. In the light of all that is taking place in the wet state now, the News and Observer, which certainly could not be listed among the leaders in the fight against repeal in this State, is moved to suggest that "before many moons wax and wane, many who voted for repeal of the Eighteenth Amendment in the belief that they were not voting for a return of the saloon, may be kicking themselves."—Winston Journal.

Confusing.

We dont seem to understand all we know about that "slander" trial conducted during the conference of the brethren down at Charlotte last week. But knowing Bill Newell more or less intimately, and having the utmost respect for those hambone fists of his, and certain of his willingness to use them, come the necessity, we'd hesitate a long time about back-talking him about something we knew to be a fact. As for deviling eim with something uncertain—we just wouldn't do it, that's all.

We are not so much interested in what it was all about as we are in the fact that the minister who was convicted of slandering his brother worker was given a reprimand, but assured that the decision of the jurors did not affect his official standing in the church. Just off hand, 'pears to us like, if the brother was guilty of slander, his fitness as a spiritual leader would be a leetle bit undermined.—Statesville Record.

Funny man! As a boy he hated grown folks' leavings at the second table, and now he orders croquettes. —Robert Quillen.

Mistake In Locality.

Two men, father and son, were hanged in Alberta, Canada, a few days ago. They were convicted, on circumstantial evidence, of the murder of a Canadian farmer. The father and son who went to the gallows for murder were from Knoxville, Tenn. They were evidently ignorant, at least were not posted on the attitude toward killers in Canada and other British dominions. In Tennessee, or North Carolina, if public sentiment is strong a conviction may be had on circumstantial evidence. But in these latter days, when sentiment is against capital punishment—or the sentiment that is expressed is—one would hardly be sent to death on evidence built up entirely from circumstance. It is entirely possible, as sometimes deve'ops, that the circumstances will prove something that never happened. The Tennesseans should have done their killing in their native land. They probably found out too late that they made a fatal mistake when they staged a killing in Canada. They don't fool with killers in that country. They bump them off with promptness and little ceremony. As a consequence there are comparatively few killings.—Statesville Daily.

The One Contingency.

Charlotte Observer.

Building of the $16,000,000 scenic highway across the peak of the Blue Ridge which the Federal government is willing to undertake and to finance is predicted upon the upon the procurement of a 200 foot right of way across all private properties by the individual States through which the monumental project will be passed, North Carolina, Tennessee and Virginia.

That would seem to be nothing at all in the way of financial assistance from the benefitting states and yet is one of those problematiissues as to the exact cost of which no estimate is possible.

If the owners of this property refuse to make a contribution of their land for this purpose and it is highly probable that they will, then North Carolina may be at the end of its row insofar as taking care of its end of the load. It has no funds which it can authoritavely invest in this sort of enterprise.

Proves Santa Is Real Person.

New York—Six-year-old Leonard E. Malherde yesterday thoroughly refuted that subtle and slanderous report that "there ain't no Santa Claus."

He went out and found Santa Claus right in the middle of Brooklyn.

And then they had to find Leonard.

He heard the slander at school. So he deliberately walked away from home, seeking the saint. The trouble was he confined in no one.

A mile away in the shopping district he came face to face with Santa Claus and they threshed it all out.

Then a patrolman spotted Leonard The boy wanted to go home to supper as Santa Claus had satisfied his mind but not his stomach.

But the patrolman detoured him by the stationed house where Leonard's father was walking the floor and awaiting a report from his "lost" son "

In 1933 adults and juveniles in the fraternal system carried more than $7.500.000,000 of insurance. Benefits paid out amounted to $133.000,000.

To prove that the world is round, if a fellow wanted to go east he could get there by going west.

Slandering The Women And Preachers.

A few half-wits and others with brains but don't know how to use them, are uttering a vile slander or the women and preachers of the state when they charge that they were in league with the bootleggers to carry the state dry on November 7.

Even as wet a paper as the Charlotte Observer cannot stand for this and says:

"To associate the purposeful leadership of the ministers of North Carolina with that of the bootleggers in repeal is vicious and slanderous.

"No right-meaning man will be guilty of it."

The Concord Tribune, another wet, while indirectly charging bootleggers with voting dry has the good grace to acknowledge that "this has nothing to do with the sincerity of the ministers." The Tribute even acknowledges that the ministers were "interested in the welfare of the people" hence their stand for prohibition.

But the most slanderous article we have yet read was that written by one Dr. R. D. Flippin, of Pilot Mountain to the Winston-Salem Journal in which he said in part:

"Let's don't ask our senators and other office holders who were for repeal to resign, and let's not censor our few level-headed men and women who refused to be stampeded by the pious hypocrits into voting against repeal. We have not heard the people of North Carolina speak in any thunderous tones. But we did see exactly how the days and bootleggers combined carried the election.

The superstitious women were promised heaven if they voted dry and threatened with hell if they voted wet. At least half of them throught that we were living under laws now that allowed bootleggers to sell liquor, and they were promised that if they voted dry there would be no more liquor in North Carolina forever.

"The rank and file of business men and working men were in favor of repeal. but failed to vote. The election was carried by hypocrites, bootleggers and superstitious women."

Such stuff as this will only make the women and ministers whom this physician calls "pious hypocrites" more determined than ever to keep North Carolina pure and undefiled and all the Flippins, Baileys, Reynolds, Gardners, Ehringhaus, Murphys and other discredited politicians of that type can change them.—Union Republican.

Will Bailey Insult The Dry Voters?

Has Josiah William Bailey completely lost his head? Despite the fact that 293,484 North Carolina men and women marched to the polls on November 7, and voted for the retention of the 18th amendment to the Constitution, voted to repudiate Bailey, Walter Murphy, Bob Reynolds and all such, Bailey the past week sent for Murphy to come to Washington and the first thing he did was to urge Jim Farley to have Murphy appointed deputy commissioner of internal revenue and in all likelihood the wet Farley will listen to the wet Bailey and the wet Murphy will be given the job.

Of course if Bailey wants to insult these 293,484 patriotic home-loving, red-blooded North Carolians by picking up their arch enemy and give him a choice job at Washington it is his business and he can take the consequences Politically Bailey is already a dead duck and we don't suppose it makes very little difference whom he names to office now.

But it certainly does not seem like the Bailey of old to be pulling such stunts. His office must have gone to his head but after 1936 elections he will be an Ex.—Union Republican.

Much that ails us is explained by the fact that a spare is now a tire instead of a bedroom. — Robert Quillen.

Davie Youth Gets Trip As Stock Judge.

Everette Smith son of Mr. and Mrs. B. B. Smith, of Mocksville returned last week from St. Louis, Mo., where he attended the National Convention of Future Farmers of America which was held in connection with the national livestock judging contest. Smith was a member of the North Carolina judging team. He was one of the four Tar Heel lads who represented this state.

Smith won the district judging contest held in May at the Win-Mock Farm in Davie county with a score of 294 from a possible 300 points. He took four years of vocational agriculture in the Mocksville High School and was coached for the livestock judging contest by L. H. Angell, teacher of vocational agriculture at Mocksville.

In the state contest held in Raleigh in August he was one of the four highest and as a consequence got a free trip to the national judging contest and the convention of Future Farmers of America of which the young Tar Heel farmers organization of North Carolina is the state unit.

Smith's average grade in agriculture for the four years in school was 90½. He made the trip to St. Louis and returned through the country by auto accompanied by J. Paul Shaw, teacher of vocational agriculture in the Denton High School.

When Congress meets in January the fire works will start. No one knows what will happen.

And now a big Federal court judge has declared the NRA to be unconstitutional. We wonder what will happen next.

It is only two weeks until Christmas. Too late now to advise you to do your Christmas shopping early. But better late than never.

It is said that the Hon. Josigh Bailey, once dry, but later wet, will give a piece of pie to our townsman Bob McNeill. Well, here's looking at you Bob.

It seems that Mr. Roosevelt's "forgotten man" in this section remains in the same fix that he was in a year or two ago. Maybe he will be remembered some day in the distant future.

Davie county jobs for Davie county people would be a fine slogan to adopt in 1934 Why import politicians from other counties and states when we have plenty of good material right here.

A subscriber told us a few days ago that just as soon as he could sell a little cotton he would call and pay us some cash that had been due us for several years. Later on we discovered that he had just sold about $75 worth of cotton and had the said filthy lucre in his pocket Such things make us have more confidence in mankind.

Postmaster Genetal James Farley called on the Pope of Rome in Italy last week Jim didn't tell the Pope that he came to North Carolina early in November and begged all the democrats to vote for the return of liquor. Of course the dry democrats didn't pay any attention to what Jim said. The Pope gave the said James a blessing before he left Vatican City.

We found an Associated Press dispatch on the first page of the Twin City Sentinel a few days ago, which made us rub our eyes and wonder if it was all a dream about this country having a democratic president. The dispatch read as follows:" The United States public debt increased $483,859,000 during November to a total of $23.534,-115.771, a new peace-time high." And this is the crowd that promised us a reign of economy a little more than a year ago, if we would elect them. Ye gods and little fishes.

Do the taxpayers of Davie county want the county commissioners to pay $125 per month of their tax money to pay the boy who is looking after the Federal Aid work in the county? Why not pay him with Federal Aid funds that are being given to the county for this purpose. We have been told that other salaries had been supplemented out of these funds. We would be glad for the Davie people to write us what they think about this matter. "The mills of the gods grind slow but exceeding ly fine."

Franklin Roosevelt has made one promise good. He promised the country liquor before Christmas, and nearly half of the states are now dripping wet. The 18th Amendment was repealed on Tuesday of last week, and now the country is supposed to drink itself back to wealth and prosperity. Such a thing can't be did. There is one thing to be thankful for—North Carolina still remains legally dry. It is now up to the state, county and city officers to put the blockader and bootlegger out of business.

Mr. and Mrs. J. F Stonestreet and children spent Sunday afternoon with relatives in Kannapolis.

SYNOPSIS

A pretty young woman finds herself in a taxicab in New York with a strange man who addresses her endearingly and speaks of "an awful shock." When he leaves her for a moment at a drug store she drives on, for she fears him. She stops at the Biltmore, still wondering who she is. Her memory is gone. From her expensive clothing she concludes she is married to a wealthy man. She meets a young woman who speaks of her desire to go to Reno for a divorce. If she can get the money. The woman vanishes with the nameless girl's purse, and $900.

The woman turned and scrutinized the girl for a moment slowly. Her face was broad and friendly, her eyes shrewd but kindly. The long gaze was one of appraisement. Then she said, "Ah Doris! How beautiful you are, Doris! I am glad you are here!" And she flung her two fat arms around the girl's soft fox collar and slender throat, and pressed a firm, wet cheek against hers.

Doris! So that was her name. She hardly felt the embrace, nor wondered at the tears. Doris! She was grateful that she had found a friend. The woman talked on. Out of the jumble of words, a sentence suddenly disclosed itself: "And so now with your husband on the seas we will have to console ourselves together until he comes back to us!" She listened breathlessly—her husband on the seas! It seemed too good to be true.

"Oh, she is frightened," said the woman fondly, addressing nobody, as seemed to be one of her habits. "And no wonder. So young. And such excitement. Come, we will get in the car."

The bellboy still stood beside the luggage. The fat little woman turned to Doris, "He would not believe I was Mrs. Du Val. He wanted to guard the luggage well." She shook her head "Louis will carry out the luggage."

Doris then noticed that a liveried chauffeur was standing a few feet away. He came forward and picked up Doris' bags. Watching everything, on the alert for some clue that would unravel more of her past to her, Doris followed.

A limousine stood at the curb. Docilely Doris hopped in after the little fat woman. There was not a qualm in her heart. Undoubtedly she had known this woman, and perhaps it would soon come back to her when and where. At least she would learn her own name.

"Put Mrs. Du Val's bags in front," said her hostess fussily. Doris stared. Mrs. Du Val! The older woman had been speaking of her to the chauffeur. So she was Mrs. Du Val. Du Val. D. V. She did not feel quite satisfied.

The baggage was quickly adjusted and the car started through the traffic-laden New York streets. "Ah, Rocky is seasick by now, n'est-ce pas?" said little Mrs. Du Val. "He cannot stand traveling, poor fellow." She tucked a robe anxiously around Doris. "But she mustn't catch cold at such a time," she went on. She clucked in her throat like a worried old hen. "You feel warm? We have a long ride, you know."

Doris did not know. But she smiled gratefully. Rocky? Who was Rocky? And why mustn't she catch cold at such a time? She wondered where they could be going.

Her mind was going around and around in a circle. Her husband was named Rocky Du Val. He had sailed for France. That much she gathered. Then the man she had been with in the taxicab had not been her husband. Unless they had been on their way to the boat. They had just been married and were going to spend their honeymoon in Europe, and she had escaped from him. That seemed very clear.

Then why had her mother-in-law expected to meet her at the Biltmore? No, that theory couldn't be right. Doubtless it was all simple enough and would come to her in a flash. The main thing was not to let anybody know she did not remember, lest they think she had gone crazy. She felt perfectly sure she was not crazy, but she didn't think she could convince anybody else.

The car went steadily forward. "We will get home before dark," said Mrs. Du Val, in her French accents.

Doris longed to ask questions: Where were they going? But her tongue was tied. Of course she was supposed to know where they were going. Just a few such questions as that and Mrs. Du Val would begin to think she was queer. Then there would be doctors, hospitals, maybe an asylum. She closed her lips tightly. No, she would tell no one. And certainly one of these days she would wake up remembering everything.

She told Mrs. Du Val, however, about the loss of her bag. The little French woman was so incensed that she all but turned the car straight back to town. "But the police will get her. Oh. She is a bad one. She is veree bad. But I thought you had no money? Rocky said he was giving you nothing, and I should give you all? Where did you get it?"

Doris flushed. Where did she get it? She wished that she knew. "He gave it to me at the last moment," she said, hating to lie and yet not knowing what else to do. Well, perhaps he did, she said to herself. Certainly she didn't know that he didn't.

However she decided to be as mum as an oyster after this experience. Even the most innocent story might trip her up with some question about her past that she couldn't answer.

"Ah but Oscar will be crazy about you," said Mrs. Du Val fondly. "Rocky was so naughty, wasn't he, not to tell us he was married. At first Oscar was ooh so mad. He walked up an' down. He said he would give Rocky nothing. Nothing. But soon I calmed him down because I know my Rocky. I knew the girl he would pick. And now when he sees you Oscar too will be so happy. Ah it will be like living our own love over! Such happiness!" The small eyes filled with tears of sentiment. The stout little hand covered hers. Doris too was filled with a rush of emotion.

"And Oscar shall do a beautiful figure of you for Rocky," went on Mrs. Du Val happily. "Your figure is just what my Oscar loves best to model. He . . ."

But Doris was no longer listening. Something had clicked in her brain. Oscar. Who was Oscar? Mrs. Du Val's husband undoubtedly. But Oscar Du Val was a famous French sculptor. And Mrs. Du Val was speaking of his modeling her.

Oscar Du Val. She hoped it might be the first ray of light breaking into her past. But no more followed. Why did she remember Oscar Du Val's name and not the name of her husband Rocky?

Mrs. Du Val leaned near her and patted her hand. "Ah Doris, now a thousand doubts are gone forever from my heart."

Doris looked inquiringly into her face. "Doubts?"

"Ah yes. Rocky is a good boy. I knew it. Many times I told Oscar. But when he stayed away from home so much—when his life in New York seemed to absorb him, I will confess to you, sometimes I was afraid. Not that I ever let Oscar know. You will not give my secret away?"

Behind the round glasses the eyes of the little French woman were full of friendliness. More than that, they were alive with love. Rocky's mother liked her. Her heart filled with gratitude. She clung to Mrs. Du Val's hand.

"You are being very sweet to me."

The moment of sentiment passed. Mrs. Du Val gave a little cluck and settled back in her corner. "No, no, you are my own daughter now, n'est-ce pas? Ah, that is what I have always wanted, a daughter."

Doris felt a pang of misgiving. If she could only know what all this meant. Could that man in the cab be Rocky? And if not, if he were her husband then Mrs. Du Val would not be her mother-in-law. Perhaps she was not being honest. Perhaps she ought to tell Mrs. Du Val all about it. She turned impulsively.

"Mrs. Du Val, I have something to tell you."

"Oh, but you must not call me Mrs. Du Val. Non, non jamais. C'est mauvais. Call me mother."

Doris smiled. "All right. But—I really ought to tell you—"

Mrs. Du Val's round little body bent at the waist. "I know, dear child. There is no need to tell me. Do not excite yourself."

"You know?"

"Yes, yes. Rocky has told me over the telephone. We must take good care of you. Oh oui. Very good care of you. And now already I can see you have had too much excitement for one day. Rocky would scold me for letting you talk so much, for talking to you like a magpie. It is not good."

Doris bit her lip. Was it possible that she had been with Rocky, and lost her memory then, and that he knew about it? It was too confusing. And much as she liked Mrs. Du Val the prospect of being taken care of was not alluring. But for her loss of memory she felt strong and well. She was not even tired.

As they rode along Doris learned several things by innuendo and direct information: that Rocky was named for Rockwell St. Gardens, the famous artist: that Oscar Du Val lived in Connecticut in the country, and had been there for twenty years: that Doris was to stay with her husband's family until Rocky returned from abroad. She decided that, after all, she must have remembered something subconsciously else how would she have known that she must go to the Biltmore to meet Mrs. Du Val?

The car turned at last into the Du Val driveway. To the right on a hill side lay the studios of Oscar Du Val. Doris caught a glimpse of his famous "Dying Indian," a piece of sculpture of which she had often seen pictures. The way led up a long curving road toward a big yellow Colonial house with white pillars over the porch. Way off to the left there were many outbuildings and sheds which Mrs. Du Val said were the farm buildings.

A tall handsome man was standing on the porch. He had white hair and piercing black eyes. He was watching the car anxiously. He waved with a violent, unAmerican cordiality.

"Ah, Oscar will be so happy," said Mrs. Du Val, as the car came to a stop before the house.

Oscar Du Val sprang down the stairs with the energy of a boy and opened the door before the chauffeur could move. A warm smile on his lips leaped into his eyes.

"Ah, Doris!"

He helped her out of the car, and surveyed her ecstatically at arm's length.

Then he folded her close to him, kissed her on the cheek and sought the eyes of his beaming wife.

"Adoree," he said, "you were right."

"Our Rocky is no fool?"

"Ah yes, our Rocky is no fool, after all."

Doris smiled shyly as Oscar Du Val released her. "You are so nice to me. But how can you tell so quickly?"

"Bah," said Du Val, "always I know instantly about people."

"After he sees them, he knows," said his wife with a slight overtone of sarcasm. "Before that, he is not so sure. He believes that our Rocky has not the good sense to choose himself a nice girl. He is sure that our Rocky—"

Du Val put his palms together in an attitude that was half prayerful, and half playful. "Ah Doris, you must forgive me. You are going to forgive me all those things which I have said to Rocky about you. I did not know you were such a girl. How could I know? And you too must admit that you have been wrong. To tell us nothing—"

"There he goes," scolded Mrs. Du Val. "Before our little Doris can step into the house he is already reproaching her."

"No, no," said Du Val. "Come we will go in. Where is your luggage?"

Louis, the chauffeur, was taking down the bags with their initials D. V. A little maid in a black dress with a white apron came out of the house and picked up the hat box. Doris felt full of happiness. Surely she had come home. These kind people were ready to shower her with love. "Come Doris," said Mrs. Du Val importantly. "At such a time, you must get plenty of rest. I will show you to your room."

They went upstairs. Louis came in carrying her bags, and a maid Estelle hovered ready to unpack them. Mrs. Du Val sent her away with a brisk clap of her competent little hands. "She is too tired now. And she wishes to unpack her own things. She is like me, n'est-ce pas?" She looked at Doris. "You wish to superintend your own unpacking?"

"Oh yes, oh yes," said Doris eagerly. She was hardly able to wait to see if the inside of the bags might not give her some clue. "And I'm not in the least tired. I can do it now."

"Oh no. At such a time in a woman's life she must rest." Mrs. Du Val looked at her with some mysterious light in her eyes that she could not understand. "You have had a tiresome trip. But look! Look what I have got for your room. As a special surprise."

"Where? What?"

"Don't you see? On the dressing table?"

In a silver frame the face of a young man smiled with an air of youthful seriousness.

"Our Rocky!" said Mrs. Du Val tenderly.

Instantly Doris loved his face. She seized the picture and gazed at it hungrily.

So this was Rocky. Rocky, her husband.

She gave a long sigh of relief. For the young serious eyes that stared back from the picture weren't the same as the dark strange unhappy eyes that had looked at her from the tense face of the man in the cab.

Mrs. Du Val was briskly opening windows. A faint breeze brought in the scent of blooming lilacs. "Maintenant," said Mrs. Du Val, "you will nap, n'est-ce pas? You will have time for a nice little sleep before dinner."

"Oh no, I must unpack."

She was eager to explore the contents of her bags. Surely they would tell her something about herself, something about Rocky.

"Non, non. Later, oui. Then Estelle will help you."

Protesting was useless. Mrs. Du Val's fat jeweled hand was on the eiderdown blanket that lay on the canopied Colonial bed. She drew off the gay patchwork counterpane quickly, and folded it neatly. "You like this little bed? I had it put in here for you and Rocky. This is Rocky's old room—but the bed is not the same. Come now," said Mrs. Du Val. Doris was forced to hop into bed obediently. It seemed the quickest way of getting rid of her solicitous mother-in-law.

"You must not get out of bed, now," warned Mrs. Du Val. She kissed Doris, tucked the covers firmly around her, then left the room on tip-toe as if Doris were already sleeping.

As the door closed Doris threw back the covers eagerly. In a moment she was fumbling with the fastening of the smallest bag. To her joy it was not locked.

Kneeling on the thick carpet she was looking inside her own "overnight" bag, examining a row of bottles with cloisonne lavender tops. Cleansing creams, night cream, astringent lotion, powder—she touched them wonderingly—a round pink bar of soap, toilet water, bath salts; tooth brush marked with her monogram, tooth paste, nail file, manicure scissors; two silver-backed brushes, a comb. They were utterly strange to her. Could these things possibly belong to her? She studied the monogram carefully. The D was there, and the V. But she could not be sure what the third letter was.

There was nothing else except some neatly folded pajamas in orchid shades. She sighed, examining the bag carefully for any small slip of paper that might tell her something. But there was nothing.

She opened the suitcase next. It contained two jersey dresses, a linen suit, a leather jacket in bright blue, two cotton sport dresses, and an evening gown with a little coat to go with it. "Like the wardrobe of a girl who expects to be gone on a very short trip," she decided, "or else has sent on her trunks."

Lesson for December 17

PAUL IN ROME

LESSON TEXT—Acts 28:11-31.

GOLDEN TEXT—I press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus. Philippians 3:14.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Paul Has Guests.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Paul's Journey to Rome.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Goals to be Reached.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Finding and Fulfilling God's Purpose.

Rome was the center of the world's power and influence. Paul expressed a longing to see Rome (Romans 1:11). His object so far as the Roman church was concerned was twofold.

First, that he might impart to them some spiritual gift, to the end that they might be established.

Second, that he might be comforted by their fellowship.

His vision no doubt extended beyond the Roman church. His hope was that from that metropolis the gospel might find its way to all parts of the world.

I. Paul's Voyage to Rome (Acts 27).

1. The ship (vv. 1-6). It was a vessel of Alexandria sailing from Myra to Italy.

2. The company (vv. 1, 2). Two of Paul's friends, Aristarchus and Luke, were permitted to go with him. Besides these three there were two hundred and seventy-three in the ship (v. 37).

3. Overtaken by a storm (vv. 7-20). Paul had advised that they spend the winter in Fair Havens, (vv. 8-12) but his advice was not heeded. The gentle south wind deceived them so they loosed from Crete, only to be overtaken by the tempestuous wind called Euroclydon. They did everything possible to save the ship.

4. Paul's serene faith (vv.21-26).

(a) His rebuke for failure to heed his advice (v. 21). This was more than a taunt, it was a reminder of the wisdom of his former advice urging them to give to him a respectful hearing.

(b) Bids them to be of good cheer (v. 22).

(c) Promises them safety (v. 22). He assured them that though the ship would go to pieces, every man's life would be saved.

(d) The source of his information (vv. 23, 24). It was revealed unto him by the angel of God.

(e) The reason for Paul's faith (v. 23). The consciousness of having been chosen by God and being engaged in his service enabled him in the midst of the most violent storm to rest in God.

5. The ship's crew all safe on land (Acts 27:27-8:10). This was exactly as the Lord had promised.

(a) The hospitable reception by the natives (v. 2). They built a fire and made the shipwrecked people as comfortable as possible in the cold and rain.

(b) Paul gathering sticks for the fire (v. 3). In this he was like his Master, ministering rather than being ministered unto.

(c) Paul bitten by a poisonous serpent (v. 3). Among the sticks gathered there was a serpent. When warmed by the fire this serpent darted at Paul and fixed its fangs upon his hand. At first the natives thought he was an escaped murderer and that retributive justice was being meted out to him. When they saw he was not harmed they concluded he was a god.

(d) Paul heals Publius' father (vv. 7-10). He now reciprocated the kindness of these people. Others came also for healing.

II. Paul's Arrival at Rome (28: 11-16).

1. Tarrying with the brethren at Puteoli (vv. 11-14).

2. Met by brethren from Rome. (v. 15). They came some forty miles to meet him. This greatly encouraged him and moved him to give thanks to God.

3. Living in his own hired house (v. 16). He was treated with great leniency, being allowed to live apart in his own hired house even though he was constantly under guard.

III. Paul's Ministry in Rome (17-31).

1. His conference with the leading Jews (17-22). He did not wait for the Sabbath day to speak to the Jews, but after a three days' rest he called the chief Jews together in order to have a fair understanding with them.

2. Paul expounding the kingdom of God and persuading concerning Jesus (23-31). He pointed out a real kingdom with the historic Jesus as King. To Paul the kingdom meant a definite reign of a definite person, not merely an improved state of society.

Sweet Savor of Christ

It does not consist so much in what we do as in our manner of doing it; not so much in our words or deeds as in an indefinable sweetness, tenderness, courtesy, unselfishness, and desire to please others to their edification.

Springs of Comfort

They are in God. He is the Father of mercies and the God of all comfort. As a father pitieth his children, so the Lord pitieth them that fear Him

The Cabin Boy's Night Before

by Elizabeth Strother

OUTSIDE the tiny fo'cas'le of the fishing schooner, the winter weather was having its way with the Annie Bell. Now and again a big sea would come aboard, sluice around the dory-nests, and wash off. The lantern, hung over the table, bobbed and swung in crazy circles, casting a weird light on the faces of the Banks fishermen busy at various tasks. Some were laboriously writing home, dating their letters December 24. Others were reading; one whittled with infinite patience, at a small boat model. But one, far from a man's age or stature, sat off by himself. His name was Willie Cole, cabin boy, fourteen years old, and desperately homesick. He tried not to think of his small home far away, his mother probably trimming a tree for the younger children, his father chuckling over this or that toy for the baby. Certainly a boy fourteen years old, used to many of the hardships of a fisherman's life, must not break down and cry on Christmas Eve. Certainly not!

The other men paid no attention to him. The pens drove on. The knife delicately pared off a splinter from the mast of the boat model. Willie clamped his jaws together and tried to say over and over the multiplication table of nine. It was the hardest, and took up the most attention. He was frowning with concentration when the cook burst in, his leathery face all a wide grin, bearing a large, round tin. It was covered with a piece of red paper. This he set down in the middle of the table. "Belay there!" he roared good naturedly. "Git clear of all your gear . . . we're a-goin to have a bit o' Christmas around here!"

The men growled a little, but gathered up their traps. Willie gave one great gulp and nearly let a tear fall. He had reached "nine times eleven" in the tables, and could hardly believe there was to be a real celebration right here in the fo'cas'le. The red paper over the tin had slits. In these the men were to poke and draw forth a gift. The tiny place began to take on an air of holiday cheer, not to say noise.

"Skipper give most of 'em," grinned the cook, as each man smiled over a tie, a pocket-knife, a belt, or large gaudy handkerchief.

The last to poke a finger in was Willie Cole. All the time he was feeling around inside there he had to remember he was fourteen years old and was expected to act like a man. At last he found something. It was quite small. Unwrapping the paper he saw it was a brass-bound compass. "To a brave boy from Captain Angus," was scratched on the back. Before he got over the wonder of this, a fisherman pushed the boat model into his hand. "Meant it for ye all the time, boy," mumbled the man. "Any kid that grabs the skipper and saves him from washin' overboard . . . deserves a grand Christmas!"

This was more than Willie could stand. He cried right there before them all, and didn't mind a bit. "Thank you, thank you . . . and Merry Christmas," he gulped. And Captain Angus, standing the doorway said, "Same to ye all, boys. Many of 'em!"

"Silent Night"

OF ALL the Christmas carols the Christian world will sing the best-known and undoubtedly the best-loved is that one which we know in English as "Silent Night, Holy Night." It is by no means the oldest of the Christmas carols, for it was written only 114 years ago by Franz Gruber, organist in the Austrian village of Oberndorf, with Josef Mohr, pastor of the parish church, contributing the words which begin, in their original German, "Stille Nacht, Heilige Nacht."

For many years the song was known throughout Europe simply as a "folk song from the Zillertal," a district in Austria. This was partly because an organ builder from the Zillertal had come to repair the Oberndorf church organ on that Christmas Eve in 1818 when Gruber and Mohr were rehearsing their new song. Back among his native mountains the organ builder sang the carol which the Strasser sisters, also natives of the Zillertal and widely noted singers of folk songs, promptly added to their concert programs.

Not until 1854 was any inquiry made into the origin of the Christmas song, which was popularly attributed to Michael Haydn. In that year court musicians at Berlin sent to St. Peter's in Salzburg to ask if a manuscript of the song might be there. By chance the youngest son of Franz Gruber was a choir boy in St. Peter's. He told the story of the song's composition, the request from Berlin was forwarded to the senior Gruber and a statement, "Authentic occasion for the writing of the Christmas song, 'Silent Night, Holy Night,'" was drawn up by the composer.

The Teutonic race has given to the observance of the great Christian festival as we know it the tree (also celebrated in a German Christmas song, "O Tannenbaum"), the legend of Kris Kringle and many other charming sentiments. But none embodies the Christmas story so utterly and with such sweet tenderness as the simple words and melody of "Silent Night, Holy Night."—Detroit Free Press

News Review of Current Events the World Over

Al Smith Joins "Tories" Who Demand Sound Dollar—Opposition to Roosevelt's Monetary Policy Grows—Californians Lynch Two Murdering Kidnapers.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

MORE loudly every day is heard the demand for a return to the "sound money" by the increasing number of those whom the President has termed "tories"; for, as the time for the assembling of congress nears there is a fast growing fear that the inflationists in that body will move for the starting of the money printing presses. Between the "tories" and the inflationists stands Mr. Roosevelt, still seemingly unperturbed, insisting on carrying out further his gold trading plan for devaluing the dollar and thus increasing commodity prices, with some form of stabilization to follow—either a gold standard devalued dollar or a commodity price index paper dollar.

Alfred E. Smith

That the dispute over the President's monetary policy is not partisan is emphasized by the stand taken by Alfred E. Smith in an open letter written for the December issue of the New Outlook but released to the press in advance.

Mr. Smith expressed his disbelief that "the Democratic party is fated to be always the party of greenbackers, paper money printers, free silverites, currency managers, rubber dollar manufacturers, and crackpots."

He added that if this is to be so "the issue is more than a partisan one, because we are dealing today with the party which actually holds responsible government office, which is not merely advocating cure-alls in a campaign, but which has in its hands the present welfare of 130,000,000 people and the future of our most cherished American institutions. . . .

"What we need in this country is absolute dependability in our money standards. It is the only thing which will restore confidence. The latest fiscal moves of the administration have undermined public confidence. They have created uncertainty.

"Uncertainty paralyzes business, discourages private initiative, drives money into hiding, and places the entire burden of sustaining the population on the central government.

"In the absence of anything definitely known to be better, I am for a return to the gold standard. I am for gold dollars as against baloney dollars. I am for experience as against experiment. If I must choose between private management of business and management of a government bureaucracy, I am for private management.

"I am ready to go through a certain amount of deflation if the choice is between this and outright money inflation. If I must choose between the leaders of the past, with all the errors they have made and with all the selfishness they have been guilty of, and the inexperienced young college professors who hold no responsible public office, but are perfectly ready to turn 130,000,000 Americans into guinea pigs for experimentation. I am going to be for the people who have made the country what it is. And I say this with full knowledge of the fact that there are many things in the old order of society which I should like to have changed and which I do not applaud or even condone."

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT himself made no comment on Mr. Smith's letter, but it drew from General Johnson, NRA administrator, who was at Warm Springs, a characteristically violent burst of denunciation. The general also made an unwarranted attack on Professor Sprague, calling him a "hitherto obscure professor" who "by a dramatic resignation obtained his little hour or two to strut across the stage." This of a man whom the Bank of England had been paying $25,000 a year to act as its adviser until the President persuaded him to come home and serve our treasury in a like capacity for $10,000 a year.

IT WAS announced by the War department that the low bid for trucks for the conservation corps was made by Chevrolet Motor company with an offer of $629.19 per unit.

The next lowest bidder was Northwest Motor company of Bethesda, Md., a Ford dealer, whose bid was $671.10 per unit delivered at Detroit, $688.10 for deliveries at Chicago and $687.60 on deliveries at Louisville, Ky.

The Chevrolet bid was for six-cylinder trucks and that of the Ford dealer for eight-cylinder trucks. The specifications of the War department provided for not less than six-cylinder motors.

R. L. Sabine, head of the Ford agency who was low bidder on a recent truck offer of the Department of Agriculture but complained recently that new bids had been asked for trucks of not less than six-cylinder motors, said Ford deliveries could be made with such promptness that the government would save money and declared that if he did not receive the order he would appeal to Comptroller General McCarl.

FIRST of the big employers to suffer for alleged violation of the President's re-employment argreement is Loft, Inc., which operates a chain of restaurants and candy stores throughout the country. General Johnson ordered the company to remove the Blue Eagle from its stores in Washington, and charges made against it by the New York compliance board were under investigation. President C. G. Guth of the company denied the accusations.

THOUSANDS of furious Californians stormed the jail at San Jose, fought a desperate battle with the police and, dragged out Jack Holmes and Thomas Thurmond, confessed kidnapers and murderers of Brooke L. Hart, the young son of a prominent merchant, and hanged them to trees in the city park. Fifteen thousand persons, many of them women and children, witnessed the lynching and cheered on the mob. That any of the lynchers ever will be punished is highly improbable. The crime of the two victims was peculiarly diabolical and cold-blooded and it is likely even the authorities, unofficially, welcome this reversion to old-time vigilante methods of dispensing justice. Gov. James Rolph had refused to send troops to help the sheriff, and later when told of the lynching said:

"This is the best lesson that California has ever given the country. We showed the country that the state is not going to tolerate kidnaping!"

ROGER TOUHY and three companions, tried in St. Paul for the kidnaping of William Hamm, Jr., fared better than did the California kidnapers and murderers. The four Chicago gangsters were acquitted by a jury. It was the first defeat for the federal government in the kidnaping cases in which it has figured since passage of the so-called Lindbergh law at the last session of congress.

The Touhy crowd, however, were still to be tried in Chicago for the kidnaping of "Jake the Barber" Factor.

MISSOURIANS followed the example set by the San Jose Californians and resorted to lynch law to punish the negro assailant of a young white woman. A mob at St. Joseph battled with the police and National Guardsmen and took Lloyd Warner from the jail and hanged and burned him. Gov. Guy B. Park declined to comment.

Governor Ritchie of Maryland sent state troops to Princess Anne and they nabbed four alleged leaders of the crowd that lynched a negro. The local authorities had failed to act in the matter and the governor took it into his own hands. The prisoners were taken to Baltimore after a mob had fought to release them from the soldiers. But almost immediately they were returned to Princess Anne on habeas corpus writs and the court there released them on the ground that the evidence was insufficient.

FRANCE has a new premier and a new ministry. Camille Chautemps has succeeded Albert Sarraut, who was overthrown by the chamber of deputies, and has formed a government that includes fourteen of the former ministers, among these being Paul-Boncour, Daladier and Sarraut. In other respects his selections, it is asserted in Paris, bear the stamp of the influence of Edouard Herriot, and many believe the new cabinet is designed to prepare the way for the return of that veteran Socialist. Herriot was turned out of the premiership a year ago because he wanted to pay the war debt due the United States, and has refused to take part in the government until after December 15—the anniversary of his downfall and the date when another installment is due. After France has repeated its act of repudiation, Herriot probably will again become premier.

Camille Chautemps

Chautemps was unable to persuade the dissident Socialists and the left Republicans to enter his cabinet, so it is made up of so-called radical Socialists.

THE Co-operative Farmers National Grain corporation, which has been fighting for years for full membership in the Chicago Board of Trade, proposed an amendment to the grain exchange code which would compel the board to grant it and other co-operatives full trading and clearing privileges.

Gov. W. I. Myers of the federal farm credit administration, in a letter to Farm Administrator George N. Peek, which went into the record, gave the full support of the government to the amendment.

Two other governmental spokesmen, Dr. J. W. T. Duvel of the grain futures administration and Wendell Byrd, special assistant to the attorney general, likewise approved the Farmers' National proposal. In view of these manifestations of federal sanction, it was regarded as virtually certain that the amendments would be approved despite the serious opposition of the exchanges.

PHYSICISTS of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology are now ready to proceed with their attempt to smash the atom, for the huge generator designed by Dr. R. J. Van De Graff successfully passed its test at Round Hill, Mass.

A 7,000,000 volt direct current bolt of man-made lightning split and crackled from the two giant aluminum cylinders which act as terminals of the generator and flashed between each other and to the roof and walls of the converted hangar which houses it.

This first test, witnessed by a handful of distinguished scientists and the anxious designers and makers of the generator, more than fulfilled the hopes of physicists who believe that when it is in operation to its full capacity of 10,000,000 volts it will tear the veil from the innermost secrets of nature.

PRESIDENT WILLIAM GREEN of the American Federation of Labor says that unemployment in the United States reached 10,076,000 in October, an increase of 11,000 over September, but that this increase was exceptionally small for that time of year. He gives warning that unstinted co-operation of the citizenry will be necessary to keep the number of jobless from growing much larger during the winter, but he sets forth these favorable factors:

Average wages increased slightly from September to October, amounting to $1.20 a month, or 1.4 per cent.

Cost of living rose only one-half of 1 per cent, slightly reducing the individual worker's loss of real income since March, bringing this down to 1.1 per cent.

Dollar buying power of workers in October was $600,000,000 per month above March.

Real buying power—that is, increased wages reduced by increased cost of living—rose 23.1 per cent above the March level.

GEN. DOUGLAS MACARTHUR, chief of staff, in his annual report to Secretary of War Dern, declares that the army's strength is now "below the danger line." He warns that our military standing is seventeenth in world relative strength, and speaks of the "obvious state of unrest now prevailing throughout the world." The general's recommendations for increasing the army's efficiency include:

Gen. Douglas MacArthur

A boost in regular army enlisted strength from 120,000 to 165,000, with immediate exemption of the enlisted man from the 15 per cent government pay cut.

An expenditure of nearly $200,000,000 on aircraft, modernization and motorization of the field artillery, mechanization, anti-aircraft equipment and general motorization.

Maintenance of the National Guard at existing strength with 48 drill periods and two weeks' active training annually.

At least 120,000 reserve officers with two weeks' annual training for at least 30,000. At present there are 119,000 reserve officers but only 87,000 are eligible for active duty training.

Restoration of the 1932 instruction and personnel scale for the R. O. T. C and C. M. T. C.

The chief of staff said the army's mobilization of the civilian conservation corps was in striking contrast with the 1917 mobilization and gave "renewed evidence of the value of systematic preparation for emergency."

But, he added, the heavy drain on the army's 12,000 regular officers in marshaling these 300,000 men "has brought regular army training in the continental United States to a virtual standstill and has almost destroyed the readiness of units for immediate and effective employment on emergency duty."

LIEUT. COL. ABELARDO HERRERA, the hated chief of the Matanzas military district under the regime of former President Machado of Cuba, and four other former officers paid with their lives for the many murders of which they were accused. They were taken from San Severino castle at Matanzas, lined up before masked men and shot to death with machine guns. The five men had been prisoners since August 12, the day Machado was driven from the island. Chief of the crimes attributed to them was the killing of the five Alvarez brothers, prominent anti-Machado revolutionists, in 1932.

ROBERT LEY, trade union commissioner under the Hitler government of Germany, has announced plans for the reorganization of Germany's labor unions into a giant group to which employers and foreigners also will be elegible.

The changes will become effective January 1, it was indicated, and meanwhile unions will not be permitted to accept new members. Under the reorganization scheme, every employer must join in his own name rather than in that of a firm.

FRANK WILSTACH, best known as a former theatrical manager and as the compiler of a dictionary of similes, died in New York. He was assistant to Will Hays in the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America.

ERNEST W. GIBSON, who formerly was a congressman from Vermont, will go back to Washington to represent that state in the senate. He was appointed by Governor Wilson to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Senator Porter H. Dale.

Telling the Christmas Story

by Katherine Edelman

IT WAS Christmas Eve. Outside the snow was falling in great feathery flakes, turning the bleak winter landscape into a thing of beauty. It clung to the stretching arms of the trees; it covered roofs and lawns with a mantle of white.

"How beautiful!" Helen Marsdale whispered to herself, as she gazed out of the window. "A symbol of the cloak of happiness that the spirit of Christmas has flung around the world."

She turned at the sound of a word. "Mother, won't you read the Christmas story now, while we wait for Dad?" It was pretty, dark-haired Patsy who spoke, but in a minute the other children echoed her request.

Mrs. Marsdale sat down in the softly-lighted room. The very atmosphere of Christmas was there. Holly wreaths hung in the window, a Christmas candle was burning on the table, and a log fire blazing upon the hearth.

Opening the Bible at the second chapter of St. Luke, she began the beautiful story that has thrilled the world through the centuries. Her voice grew in richness and volume as she went on.

"And she brought forth her first-born son, and wrapped him in swaddling clothes, and laid him in a manger, because there was no room for them at the inn.

"And there were in the same country shepherds abiding in the fields, keeping watch over their flocks by night.

"And, lo, the angel of the Lord came upon them, and the glory of the Lord shone round about them: and they were sore afraid.

"And the angel said to them, Fear not: for behold, I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all the people.

"For unto you is born this day in the city of David a Savior, which is Christ the Lord."

"Mother, how beautiful your voice is. It—it sounds just like music." Robin, a slender boy of twelve was speaking, and his own tones were tremulous with emotion.

"It is the beauty and simplicity of the story, Robin, which you feel. One can almost see and hear as they read—Mary and Joseph—and—and the Christ Child."

There was silence in the room for a minute. Again Robin was the first to speak: "I—I wish I could go like the shepherds and adore Him," he said, his blue eyes shining.

"Robin, that isn't possible for us now, but we can show our love for him in many other ways at Christmas. By being thoughtful and kind, by making others happy, by remembering those who are in need." Mrs. Marsdale reached out and patted her son's blond head as she read:

"And this shall be a sign unto you: Ye shall find the babe wrapped in swaddling clothes, lying in a manger.

"And suddenly there was with the angel a multitude of the heavenly host praising God, and saying,

"Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men.

"And it came to pass, as the angels were gone away from them into Heaven, the shepherds said one to another, Let us now go even unto Bethlehem, and see this thing which is come to pass, which the Lord had made known to us.

"And they came with haste, and found Mary and Joseph, and the Babe lying in a manger."

So intend were the family, so wrapped up in the beauty and absorbing interest of the story, that James Marsdale stood in their midst before they knew it.

"Oh, dad!" Robin cried, "Mother has been reading about the coming of the Christ Child—about the shepherds—and—and—everything. I wish you had been here."

"I wish I had," James Marsdale replied, as he lifted Robin in his arms. "I can never forget the beautiful picture you made as I entered. All of you listening, and—and mother's beautiful voice falling like music in the room." He smiled with rare understanding at his wife as he finished speaking.

Helen Marsdale returned his smile. "We shall wait for you next year," she said; "this beautiful hour is going to be a part of our Christmas for always."

Christmas Cards Help Uncle Sam

The annual exchange of Christmas cards gives the post office a little problem to handle, but it ought to help decrease the annual deficit.

Festival of the Epiphany

The festival of the Epiphany, January 6, is a survival of the old Christmas which, in the Fourth century, was transposed to December 25.

National Topics Interpreted by William Bruckart

Washington.—History shows that many years are required for the accomplishment of a transition in politics. New alignments in party groups are seldom, if ever, brought about in the span of a lifetime. Yet, those alignments appear now to be very near, so near, in fact, that astute political observers of national politics are looking for a shakeup that will have been virtually completed when the time arrives for another national election.

Realignment of Voters

Because things move so slowly in political transitions, I believe we are generally prone to dismiss each little incident as without particular significance. Nevertheless, each one counts, and in the aggregate, if we pause to collect them, the minor changes constitute the web or pattern of a great movement. Hence, circumstances of the last few weeks necessarily must be weighed, for in those circumstances is seen that which may verily prove to be the beginning of the final stage in a national realignment of voters. And, as has been the case in some other political changes among voters in the United States, money is the focal point, the center about which the whole thing revolves.

There is developing, according to the best political judgment available in Washington, a definite trend among party men and women toward affiliation with one party or the other solely on the basis of economic views of the party chosen. In other words, there are those who believe in attempting new things in government and in its relationship with commerce and industry, and there are those who believe in allowing private initiative to lead the way and develop the changes as human nature demands. Roughly, the two types like to describe themselves as "liberals and conservatives" in accordance with the respective views set out above. So the political observers who study those things day after day and interpret their meaning are of the opinion that important changes are coming.

The conclusions reached by many of these observers is that perhaps as early as the national campaign of 1936, there will be shifts from Republican rolls to Democratic rolls, and shifts of others from Democratic rolls to Republican rolls in sufficient numbers to have established one of the parties, as distinctly liberal and the other as distinctly conservative. The Roosevelt campaign last year developed enormous shifts; that is, it developed a transfer of voters from Republican ranks to those of the Democrats for permanent residence. In pointing to the fact, I do not include the "protest" vote that went to the Roosevelt candidacy. Much of that will be back home in the Republican ranks if and when Mr. Roosevelt makes the race for President again. Excluding that protest vote, there were thousands who had checked the Republican ballots heretofore who will never do so again.

That brings me to the present situation, the circumstance that has come over the question of what sort of money we shall have. Mr. Roosevelt's monetary policies have found favor in vast areas of the country and they have met with an objection as vehement and as bitter as peace-time views can be. The result of all of this is an issue has been so sharply drawn that a decision by the country cannot be avoided, barring one thing. That one thing is a return to prosperity at a rate much faster than is possible to expect.

May Shift Allegiance

When I said there would be partisans leaving their old political haunts to ally themselves with what had been their opposition party, I cannot include such men as Alfred E. Smith, former governor of New York and 1928 Presidential candidate of the Democratic party. Nor can it be expected that Senator Carter Glass of Virginia will desert the affiliation of his lifetime to turn Republican, even though both the former governor and the senator strongly espouse sound money. But they serve as illustrations of the point I am trying to make: if those two men were not so high up in party councils they might leave the party. Thousands of less consequence will do it.

Observers here contend that it is quite possible that the La Follette group of Wisconsin and its step-children in other states and the Norris faction in Nebraska with its kindred, the Brookhart group in Iowa and the Johnson Republicans of California, among others, might logically be expected to transfer their allegiance to the liberal party. They have been Republicans only in part for some years, and Senator Norris campaigned for Roosevelt, as he did for Smith in 1928. While these factions and "wings" of the Republicans may be looked upon as available timber for the anticipated liberal party, there are a great many Democrats who are Democrats almost solely because they happened to have been born, or located later, in a thoroughly Democratic idea. They are conservative by birth and instinct and by judgment.

It would seem to be a situation, therefore, in accordance with the way seasoned observers size it up, namely, that the Republican party eventually will be the completely conservative party and the Democrats will carry the banner of the liberal thought of the country.

Pursuing this reasoning further, it is made to appear that eventually we may see the party divisions formulated sharply in accordance with the type of commerce and industry in each section of the country. For example, the manufacturing cities of the East may be expected to be hide-bound conservative as one extreme, while hard-driven farm areas in the Middle West may as naturally be expected to go liberal, if not radically liberal. Liberal and conservative thought obviously divide on economic lines. The stage seems to be set for consummation of that which has been in the making since the "Bull Moose" days when Theodore Roosevelt bolted the Republicans.

Johnson's Threat

General Johnson, the national recovery administrator, burst out with a new threat the other day, and the chorus of chortles that it evoked leads me to believe he has moved out on the wrong foot. The general, once a hard-boiled cavalry officer who remains hard-boiled, says that the federal government is going to "police" business unless business polices itself under the codes of fair competition. All of which is possible, of course, but in my wanderings around the capital city and in conversations with business men from other parts of the country, I feel that the general would be biting off more than he can chew if he prodeeds far on the program impiled by his announcement.

There can be no honest doubt that "chiseling," as Mr. Roosevelt described it, is taking place in almost every community to a greater or less extent. It is evident to anyone taking the trouble to look about him. There are hundreds of businesses that have signed the codes of fair competition with their fingers crossed. They knew it would be dangerous to refuse to sign and so they signed in order to get the famed "blue eagle" insignia, but they had no intention of living up to their obligation. It is a sad commentary, yet it is true, that a certain element of business, and quite a large element at that, cannot be trusted.

So, as I see the problem, perhaps General Johnson is right in demanding that business be policed. The weakness of his plan, however, is inherent in the scheme for controlling business. Federal control necessarily means that the national government has to inject itself into the private affairs of all, and that is the sort of thing that led up to repeal of the Eighteenth amendment. People resented interference from the government in their personal affairs.

Then, there is another phase of the problem, a difficulty as applicable to prohibition as it is in General Johnson's plan. Thousands of persons will be required for this policing job, just as thousands were used in prohibition enforcement. There will be as many, or more, "meddlesome matties" get into the Johnson police as were found in the prohibition police, and there will be some few straight-out crooks get jobs. The meddlesome individuals, either through fanaticism or through a misguided sense of duty, will stir up more fuss in a few minutes than they ought to stir up in a year. Crooks, if any get in, will "bleed" business which will be forced to pay for protection, exactly as occurred in the case of prohibition.

Morgenthau Backs Down

Washington newspaper correspondents who devote their time to writing of financial affairs in the treasury have lately come through a brisk, although brief, battle with the new acting secretary, Henry Morgenthau, Jr. No sooner had Mr. Morgenthau, who is only forty-two years old, been installed as acting secretary, than he sought to curb the rights of the correspondents by forbidding his subordinates to talk with the writers. It was censorship, if ever censorship was attempted. The writers rose up in righteous wrath and with an announcement that there would be no compromise on the principle.

The battle lasted, as a matter of fact, only three days before the acting secretary called the correspondents to his office to invite them to "agree", to a modification of his gag rule. He was met with an absolute refusal to "agree" to any proposal unless that proposal contemplated freedom of the writers to seek and obtain factual information that was a matter of record and properly available to the public. The new head of the treasury was in a tough spot and he yielded on all points which the writers demanded as their privilege, except that he requested they avoid seeking information on treasury policies from the subordinate officials. Since the correspondents never have been willing to take information on the framing of policies from anyone in official life excepting those who decide questions of policy, namely, department heads, the writers felt they had won, and were satisfied.

The Christmas Present

By Helen Gaisford

THE gay Christmas colors of the packages in Gloria Parson's arms made a bright spot in the whirling snow. On her collar was a spray of holly, and a wreath hung over one arm.

She picked her way along the snow-covered path to the Stevens' cottage. Old Mrs. Stevens answered her knock. "Why, Gloria!" she exclaimed. "That's right—it is Christmas, isn't it?"

"Yes, indeed," Gloria replied. "Time to be merry! Now this wreath goes on the window, so! And here is a bit of fruit cake and some other goodies. This is your present, and this is Mr. Stevens' present, and here is some medicine for him besides. How is he today?"

"Bless your kind soul," Mrs. Stevens answered. "I don't know how to thank you for all you've done for old folks. He's just about the same, thank you. When one is old and apparently forgotten, one doesn't get well quickly."

"Why you aren't forgotten, Mrs. Stevens," said Gloria. "I could never forget you."

"No, you've been a dear, but sometimes—"

She was interrupted by a knock at the door, where there stood a tall, broad-shouldered man. When Mrs. Stevens opened the door, he picked her up without a word and carried her into the room.

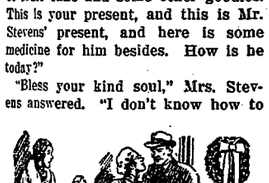

Then, as she gasped in astonishment, he put her down. "Mother," he asked, "don't you know your own son Jim?"

"Why, it is—it is my boy!" she clasped him to her. "Father," she cried, "it's our boy Jim come home again."

"I'll just say Merry Christmas and run along," Gloria began, but Mrs. Stevens would not hear of it. When, some time later, Gloria did leave, Jim accompanied her to her car.

"I just want to thank you for all you're done for them," he told her. "You can't think much of me, letting them down this way. But I guess lots of fellows, when they get to roaming, forget to write home. If I'd known dad was sick—"

"I understand," Gloria answered,

"and I'm sure he will be much better now. You were the Christmas present he really needed."

"Mother," Jim asked, when he got back to the house, "didn't you say this girl had been like a daughter to you?"

"Yes, indeed, my son."

"Well, I think she's great. I've made my pile, and I'm going to stay home from now on. If things work out, maybe she will be a daughter to you by next Christmas."

A Shepherd's Little Boy

By Martha Banning Thomas

LITTLE JACOB hurried home through the dark, narrow streets. He and his mother lived in a room on the outskirts of Bethlehem, yet even here, there were winding passageways, frightening corners, and a wide court filled with shadows. Little Jacob was afraid, yet not afraid. The things he had seen, the things he had heard went with him; and though his small legs ached with weariness, his heart sang with a strange music.

At last he reached the door of a low, white house. Softly he pushed it open and climbed the stone stairs leading to the poor room he and his mother occupied while his father watched the flocks on the hillsides.

From a straw bed on the floor his mother roused herself. Little Jacob ran to her, reaching for her hand. "Mother, quick . . . come here to the window," he panted.

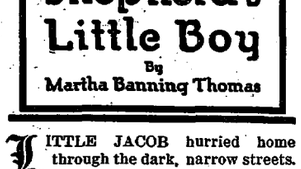

"But I thought you would stay all night with your father. When you begged to go, you promised me," she said. "Did you come all alone this long distance?" she shook him in affectionate reproach.

He pulled at her hands. "Hurry, mother, hurry!"

Reluctantly she rose from her bed and went with him to the window. Behind them lay the flat-roofed sleeping village. Before them were a few scattered houses, then the hills and pastures for the flocks. The sky was a deep, cold blue dusted with stars.

"Look, mother, look!" Little Jacob pointed towards the East—"See . . . see, it's still there!"

Jacob's mother looked. She saw a soft, trembling radiance which fell in a glimmering cascade from a single star. "What is it?" she breathed, and instinctively sank to her knees. Little Jacob dropped beside her.

The star shone on with a pure serenity of light different from that of the others. "While we were watching the flocks," whispered little Jacob, "I felt something pulling at my eyelids, mother, so that I had to open them wide . . . and I saw the star, mother, and there was music"—his voice was hushed and awed—"soft and sweet, yet everywhere like a strange wind blowing . . . and then I saw white things flashing, mother, all through the light . . . and voices . . . and all the shepherds were afraid. But I wasn't afraid. Some day I'll sing to you what the angels sang . . . I can remember it, I know. I saw the sheep kneel down, too, mother, and bow their heads . . . I had to run home to tell you."

She reached out her hand to clutch his shoulder in a slow sort of wonder.

"The angels sang that Christ the Lord was born, mother . . . and the music grew softer and softer, and died away. Father trembled so he could not speak nor raise his head. I told him I must run home to you . . . but he did not answer."

His mother's hand tightened on his shoulder. Her head was bowed. She prayed.

"DON'T you like it, all this?" asked Joel.

"Oh, well enough," replied Sonia, without enthusiasm.

It was evening, but the snowy path through the woods was easy to follow. Their feet broke through the crust with a crisp crunching.

"I thought this would be so different," explained Joel, "I'm fed up on the usual Christmas parties. Sometimes it seems as if we were not trying to remember Christmas."

The spruce trees on either side stood silent, and laden with snow. There was no sound in them but an occasional soft soughing, as if they sighed in anticipation of some expected miracle.

"Noise, people . . . dancing . . . I've liked it all as well as you, Sonia. But lately I've wanted something more. I've felt as if I were missing out, letting important things get by, and not really knowing it."

Sonia walked with a light, quick grace. She wore a white sports suit topped by a red cap and a tassel. She was very quiet—Sonia the sparkling, the much-sought-after, the most popular girl at parties. Joel moved closer. "I don't want to spoil your Christmas fun by insisting on this country stuff . . . but I sort of thought—" he tried to keep his voice from sounding wistful—"we might even understand each other better if we got away from routine pleasure. Look ahead there, dear . . . see? There's a faint, clear light in the east." Impulsively he put his arm around her. "Who knows? Maybe a star will rise for us!"

Sonia said maybe there would. Her tone was listless. She had too gracious a nature to be disagreeable, but Joel felt hurt at her unresponsiveness. He moved away, and they went on.

A rabbit darted across their path. An owl deep in the woods gave a faint, far call, almost human. "Come on, Sonia, let's sing a carol. I feel just like it. Let's sing a carol to the Christmas star," begged Joel.

"You're a silly boy," she said. But she kindled to his enthusiasm.

"When shepherds watched their flocks by night, all seated on the ground," began Joel.

Sonia joined in. Their voices rang eerily through the white, silent woods.

A Step in the Snow at the Other Side of the Bridge.

The very trees seemed to listen. As the final note died away, thinning to a mere thread, they heard again that far, strange call of the owl.

"That's the loneliest sound I ever heard!" cried Sonia. "Wouldn't the gang at home laugh at us for this crazy stunt at Christmas Eve?"

The girl reached for his hand, her voice bravely taking up the refrain. On through the blackness they walked, and their voices seemed to reach ahead of them, instead of floating upwards.

"There, what did I tell you!" Excitedly Joel pointed to the top of a tree. Just at the tip hung a star, beautiful beyond belief, trembling with a clear radiance. An ice prism caught the gleam and shattered it into a thousand glancing rays. "Our Christmas star, Sonia," breathed Joel. So they stood a moment, both caught up in a hush of wonder.

"Forgive me if I sound too solemn, Sonia—but somehow I think of Christmas as being a time of reverence as well as revelry. I wanted you to feel this, too, tonight with me. When we're married we've got to have some fine things to hold to, something bigger than ourselves; something that means Christmas—the real spirit of it."

She smiled up into his face. "You're a funny boy, but I'm awfully fond of you. I . . ." she broke off, startled.

A step crunched through the snow at the other side of the bridge. The figure of a man staggered into view. "Hey!" he called, as he clung to the bridge rail for support. His voice barely reached them; he was panting for breath. "Them carols you sang . . . heard 'em away off . . . mighty pretty . . . I lost my way . . . couldn't find the road. I kept a-hootin', hopin' someone would hear me . . ." He swayed, caught himself. "I been a-walkin' and walkin' for hours, but when I heard them songs, it put new courage into me . . . and I stivered as fast as I could, straight for 'em! Maybe they saved my life . . . gittin' awful cold and still tonight . . . couldn't have walked much longer."

Sonia touched Joel's arm. "I see what you're driving at," she whispered, "something nearer the meaning of things. Let's help the poor man. He's exhausted."

NOT PLAYING FAIR

Louder and more insistent cries from the bathroom made it increasingly evident that it was entirely too small a room for seven-year-old twin boys to wash their neck and ears in peace.

At last the door burst open and Donnie, bearing every evidence of the defeated man, and hurt to the quick by it, ran crying to the nearest consoler.

"Mother, Charles sticks his tongue out at me and then he shuts his eyes so he can't see me stick mine out at him!" he said.

Score One for Brown

The argument had been all on Mrs. Brown's side throughout the evening, and Brown was distinctly annoyed.

"You seem to think a cold in the head means nothing to a woman," stormed his wife. "I don't know of anything more annoying."

Her husband peered over the newspaper he had been trying to read.

"No?" he countered, with a rare flash of spirit. "What about lockjaw?"

Had Him Guessing

"You say that your wife has received an anonymous letter informing her of something you did before your marriage. Well, the best thing you can do is to confess."

"I know! but she won't let me read the letter, and I don't know what to confess."

"Why do you keep a parrot?"

"Because I like to hear it talk. The parrot is the only creature gifted with the power of speech that is content to repeat just what it hears without trying to make a long story of it."—Montreal Star.

No, Not as a Rule!

"You use a lot of yardsticks," said the principal to the teacher who does not believe in sparing the rod. "Do you use them every period?"

"Well, I don't use them as a rule."

MAN OF EXPERIENCE

"That's the second time today I've seen that man following that woman in another car, yelling at her all the time."

"Yes, that's old Johnson. He's teaching his wife to drive, but he's not taking any risks himself!"

Joke of the Season

"Why, George! What are you laughing at?"

"Oh, I've just heard the best joke of the year."

"What is it?"

"Didn't you know that our maid has got a job in a china shop?"

Proof Positive

"I wonder if dyeing the hair is really as dangerous as some of the doctors say?" remarked Nutt.

"You bet it is," replied Henpeck. "An uncle of mine tried it once and within a month he was married to a widow with four children."

"KEEPING UP WITH THE JONESES"

Modern "Society" Girls Frown Upon Idleness

No modern girl could be content with the existence of those young ladies who turned out to be the grandmothers of the present generation of society girls, writes "Ex-Debutante" in the Saturday Evening Post.

A girl who went to work in my grandmother's time was ruined socially. Today nearly every girl I know is busy with some kind of a career.

One of the richest girls of my year is a bacteriologist with a swell job and a lot of responsibility. To her, a germ is a germ, and she doesn't ask whether its host was Park avenue or Ninth. Another one I've known for years is engaged in concert work. Ever since she was eight she wanted to be an opera singer. Two others have gone on the stage. They have worked like dogs, too. Another rich one is engaged in social service work.

An awful lot have gone in for interior decorating, and even more are trying to make a living as journalists. They write society stuff for the gossip papers and prepare articles for some of the fashion magazines. One writes about the drama. Another for a while wrote society gossip for a tabloid. There are several who earn money by modeling for advertising.

Some of these girls are working to escape boredom, but a great many have another incentive. They have had to make money.

May Raise Subscription Price.

Our paper house has notified us that the cost of our blank paper and printed service has been inincreased about 25 per cent. above the former price we have been paying. If things contine to advance it seems that we will be forced to raise the subscription price of The Record from $1 00 to $1.50 per year For the past three years we have been trying to pay our bills and keep the price of the paper at the same low rate. It all our subscribers would keep their subscriptions paid up we might be able to continue at the old price. It is up to our patrons as to whether we can continue to issue the paper at the low price of only $1.00 per year.

The Master's Voice.

"There must be a decided move to show the people that they can have what they want when they want it and where they want it," said Pierce E. Dupont, chairman of the executive committee of the Association Against the Eighteenth Amendment. Continuing he said, "I have never been able to find anyone who could tell me why selling over a bar is a bad thing. I can't see any harm in it." The Master has spoken and all of the small fry will take notice and govern themselves accordingly. Du Pont and his associates did not repeal the 18th amendment for fun. They bought and paid for repeal and now they will make such laws as they see fit. These little pitiful, mild, timorous vacillating North Carolina wets will have no say so in the matter. They must continue to obey the Master's Voice. One of the poor little things went away last summer to study methods of the control of the liquor industry as if the bosses would listen to anything he might say. That was about as ridiculous a performance as took place during the campaign. These poor little southern things that got wet for the first time looked ridiculous to the real wets as to their former dry associates. We have to admit that Du Pont, Raskob et al have a right to write the liquor laws for this country. They bought and paid for repeal now it is their privilege to write the future laws. It was this same Pierre Du Pont who said he would save $10,000,000 a year in one of his companies if and when the 18th amendment was repealed. Now he will have to fix the laws so that he will be insured of his $10 000,000 per year That is true of the U. S. laws but he and his hirelings and dupes must keep their liquor soaked hands off the North Carolina laws. He, his associates, his dupes and hirelings have been repudiated by the upstanding citizens of North Carolina—Thank God Charity and Children

Whe hope "The Last Round Up" will soon include the radio studio cowboys who sing it.

3 about Cigarettes

Not so long ago practically all cigarettes were made by hand

Now, Chesterfields are made by high-speed machines that turn out 750 cigarettes a minute, and the cigarettes are practically not touched by hand.

BY the use of long steel ovens —drying machines of the most modern type—and by ageing the leaf tobacco for 30 months—like wine is aged—Chesterfield tobacco is milder and tastes better.

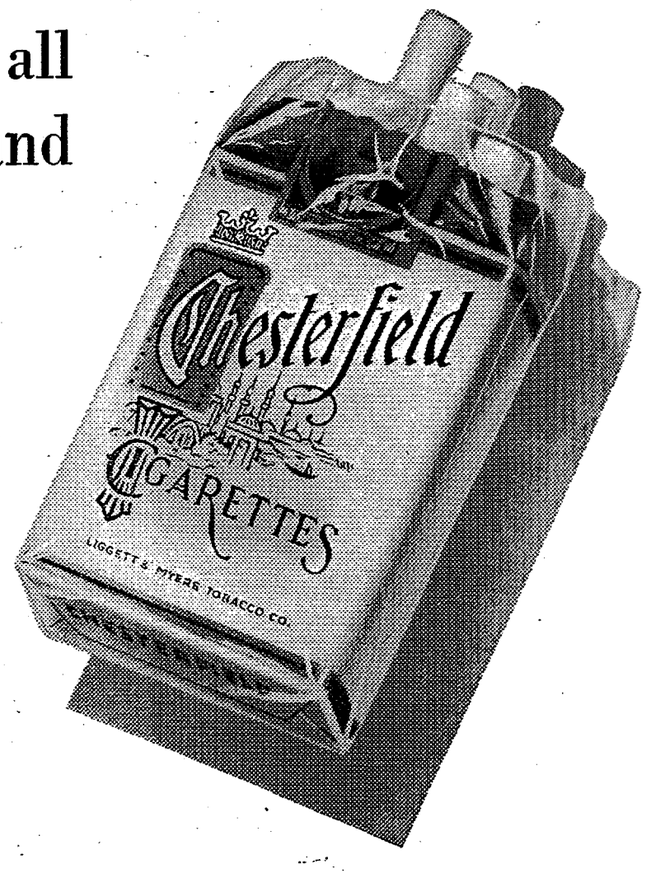

Only pure cigarette paper—the best made—is used for Chesterfield.

And to make sure that everything that goes into Chesterfield is just right, expert chemists test all materials that are used in any way in the manufacture.

Chesterfields are made and packed in clean, up-to-date factories, where the air is changed every 4½ minutes. The moisture-proof package, wrapped in Du Pont's No. 300 Cellophane —the best made—reaches you just as if you went by the factory door.

In a letter to us, an eminent scientist says:

"Chesterfield Cigarettes are just as pure as the water you drink."

Make Our Christmas A Happy One.

We want about 500 of our subscribers who are owing us to come forward or send us their renewal before Christmas so that we can enjoy the happy season along with our other brethren. It takes cash to run a paper and we feel sure our friends will help us make those we owe happy by paying us so that we may pay others. The Record still retails at $1 00 per year, and is the best paper in the county regardless of price. We want every man in the county who does not now take the paper to send us their subscription before Christmas. We want at least 100 new subscribers to begin the year with, and 500 old ones to renew. Will you help us? We feel sure that you will feel better if you will give us a call and hand us a life preserver. There are a few people in this city who do not take our paper, but the number grows smaller weekly. Don't let the New Year roll around and find your name off our books. The Record has helped others, it will help you.

Embarrassment.

Horace Horse in the Stanley News and Press tells this one: "A newspaper offering $1 00 for each 'embarrassing moment' letter accepted by the editor, is reported to have received the following epistle:

'I work on an early night shift at the steel plant. I got home an hour early last night and there I found another man and my wife. I was very embarrassed. Please send me $2 as my wife was also embarrassed.'

"The editor, so we are told, sent a check for $3 00, admitting the possibility that the stranger, too, might have been embarrassed."

Which is in line with the story of the motorist who ran over and killed a farmer's valuable hen. Being told that it was the only hen he had, and worth at least a dollar, the traveler forked over that amount and prepared to drive on. "Y' oughta gimmie another dollar," said the ruralist, "because when my ole rooster hears about this. It'll be the finish o' him, too." —Statesville Record.

Must Pay Tax On Meat

Commissioner of Internal Revenue Guy T. Helvering stated today that it has been brought to the attention of the Bureau of International Revenue that in many instances farmers and others are slaughtering hogs and selling the products to consumers without payment of the processing tax. This is a violation of the Agricultural Adjustment Act and regulrtions promulgated thereunder, which provide that any person who slaughters hogs for market must file appropriate returns and pay the processing tax thereon.

The tax applies even in the case of the producer who slaughters his own hogs and sells or otherwise disposes of all or any part of the products.

Heavy penalties are provided for violation of the tax and any person who slaughters hogs and sells all or any part thereof should confer with the collector of internal revenue for his district who will assist him in preparing and filing the required returns.

Just Another Week-End.

North Carolinians went about the perfunctory bcsiness of killing themselves and each other on the state highways during the past week-end Fourteen were dead when the week-end came to a close and many more were iajured, It was just another week-end. There was nothing unusual about it such as a lack of death would be. Blood on the highwys of North Carolina is becoming only slightly less common than rain.—Raleigh News and Observer.

No More Seed Loans.

Under the new laws governing the work of the Farm Credit administration, new machinery is being set up for the handling of seed and fertilizer loans beginning with the 1934 season. North Carolina farmers will handle their own credit needs with the aid of the Production Credit corporotion affiliated with the Land Bank at Columbia.

The new plan provides for farmers to secure adequate and permanent credit for producing crops, breeding, raising and fattening livestock and for the production of poultry and all livestock products.

The Production Credit corporation has a capital stock of $7,500,000 and will organize, provide the initial credit for and supervise the operation of local production credit associations in all communities where the need exists.

"It will be the duty of these associations to make loans directly to farmer-borrowers and the associations will, in turn, discount the farmers' notes directly with the Federal Intermediate Credit Bank of Columbia," says A. F. Lever, in charge of public relations for the bank. "If ten or more farmers manifest an interest in forming an association, the Columbia corporation will send a representative to the community to help arrange the matter. County farm agents will also help."

These associations are not to be set up to provide an easy way for farmers to get into debt but to help him get out and stay out of debt, Mr. Lever explains. He says that anyone desiring definite information about how to organize one of the associations should talk over the matter with his farm agent or write directly to the corporation at Columbia, South Carolina.

It is the belief of extension authorities at State College that this new plan will be found more satisfactory in the long run than the old seed loans of the past. —Ex.

Women To The Rescue.

When the men folk in a neighborhood not far from Sanford, Lee county, recently failed to respond to a call for help, the women rose up and set their mates an example of neighborly kindness, as revealed by the following narrative:

Mrs. Senith Smith, an old woman who live alone and is almost helpless, sent out a call through one of the Sanford papers, asking that the men of the neighborhood come to her home and cut some wood for her. However, no men showed up the day appointed.

When a number of the women of the neighborhood went to her home a few days ago, she was shivering by a fireless fireplace while the north wind howled outside. "It was more than the heart of a woman could stand," as one of the women expressed it. A party of women including Mrs. Clyde Colley, Mrs. Forrest Beal, Mrs. Luther Oldham and Misses Kate Tally, Gladys Jeffries and Vallie Mae Oldham and Melvin Colley, Purvis Oldham and James Worthy, the latter a negro boy, immediately shouldered their axes and went to the nearby woods, cut five large loads of wood, and hauled it to Miss Smith's home.—Ex.

Had Waited On Him Enough Already.

The mother of Georgia's youthful U. S Senator, Richard B. Russell, Jr., is mighty proud of her boy—but she doesn't believe in spoiling him. While he was still Governor of the state she attended a large barquet in his honor. When he entered the hall everyone rose except his mother. A woman at her table, who did not know, was surprised, inquired if she did not approve of standing for the Governor. "No, I don't was the brusk reply. "I kad to get up for him too much when he was a baby."

Assails NRA.

Prof. Philip Cabot, of the Harvard University graduate school of business administration, the past week characterized the administration of the national recovery program by Gen. Hugh S. Johnson as "sheer Ku Klux Klan tactics with all its intolerance, which, if not stopped soon, will leave a scar on the nation that will never be removed."

Professor Cabot's talk in the Hartford Golf club, at the first meeting of the newly formed Harvard business school club of Connecticut, marked the second attack by a Harvard proffesor on the NRA. in as many days at Hartford.

The previous night, Prof. Malcolm P. McNair, of the Harvard business school, told a group of department store executives: "You can't legislate ethics and fair practices," as he compared the NRA to prohibition.

Professor Cabot, a nationally known public utility economist, said the time has come for all "clear thinking men who love their country," to mak their criticism of the NRA heard, so that President Roosevelt may be aware of their opposition.

He predicted that an attempt to push the price level up in six months would result in panic instead of recovery, and asserted that the present policy of buying gold, instead of being currency re-organization "looks more like tampering with the currency for the benefit of one class and that is illegal."

One Thing We Don't Understand.

This isn't being written from the standpoint of criticism; it is merely a request for information.

We'll admit at the very outset that when it comes to understanding matters of national and international finance, we're dumb. Just plain dumb.

We read in the papers where millions are being spent by the government in Civilian Conservation Camps. We glance down another column and we see where additional millions are being spent to carry out the Public Works Program. We turn over the page and we learn that even more millions are being spent in relief work and for other purposes.

Now then, here's the point that isn't quite clear to us:

Where are all those millions coming from? For every dollar the government spends somebody has to pay a dollar.

Who is going to pay all these dollars which are now being spent?—The State.

Bees And Men.

Spartanburg Herald

An observer has discovered that bees, entering and leaving the hive, have adopted a system which prevents jostling, crowding and interference with work. Bees laden with material for making honey are given the right of way by those which have delivered their loads.

It was Solomon who admonished humanity to go the ant and consider her ways. He might have included the bee and other insects and wild things in his advice to man. The bee respects one of its kind which bears a burden. Man as a rule ignores his fellow who has a load. The bee establishes traffic rules and obey them. Man makes traffic rules and seems to take delight in breaking them. The bee looks ahead and prepares its budget and lives within it. Ordinary man doesn't give a hang about budgets and often lives from hand to mouth.

There is much for man to learn from the habits and customs of the bee and it has been so ever since the first man robbed a bee tree, but man has been slow to learn Surprise Birthday Dinner.

The children and grandchildren of Mrs. T. S. Irvin, of Winston-Salem, met with her daughter Mrs Troy Hutchins near Farmington, Sunday, Dec. 10th, and gave her a surprise dinner, it being her 63rd birthday. The long table was loaded with lots of good things to eat, also a beautiful birthday cake bearing 63 glowing candles. Mrs. Irvin received many lovely and useful gifts: Those present were Mr Mrs. Charlie Groce, Wade and Wilma Groce, of near Yadkinville; Mr and Mrs Edgar Laughter and little Bobbie Gene, of North Wilkesboro; Mr. and Mrs. V. Turner, of Winston-Salem; Miss Irene Irvin, Messrs. Glenn and Ray Irvin, of Winston Salem; Mr. and Mrs. Troy Hutchins and children Edward Irvin, Edith and Neldia. Other friends were Mr. Irvin Hutchins, of Yadkinville; Mrs. D. C. Penry, LaDeen Lakey, Farmington; Mrs Groce, of near Yadkinville. The occasion was enjoyed by all, with every one wishing her many happy returns.

Death Claims Davie Citizen.

M. J. Hendricks, 67, Davie county farmer and one-time member of the state legislature, died in a Winston-Salem hospital Wednesday.

Mr. Hendricks had been in the hospital two weeks and underwent an operation and his condition had been critical since.

Funeral services were conducted from the home at Farmington, at 10:30 o'clock Friday morning and from Courtney Baptist church, Yadkin county, at 11 o'clock. The Rev. W. W. Smoak officiated.

Mr. Hendricks was born in Iredell county January 26, 1876, the son of Frank M. and Mattie Redmon Hendricks. He was a member of the Farmington Masonic Lodge and of the Farmington Baptist church.

Surviving are the widow, Mrs. Emma T. Eaton Hendricks; two P. M. Hendricks, of Lexington, and J. W. Hendricks, of Statesville; four daughters, Mrs. J. H. Gilley, of Madison, Mrs. J. L. Woodleaf, of Clemmons, Mrs. J. S. Coldtrane, of Winston-Salem, and Miss Grace Hendricks, of Statesville; two brothers, F. B. and J H. Hendricks, both of Winston Salem, and three sisters, Mrs. C. L. Bagby and Mrs. S. T. Davis, both of Winston-Salem, and Mrs. J. E. Davis, of Courtney.

Does This Apply In Davie.

J. H. McKenzie, who is in charge of the national reemployment office, issued a warning this morning that any person who was found to have quit a job to be employed by the CWA would lose his job at the latter place.—Salisbury Post.

The idea, we thought, of the CWA., was to give employment to those of our citizens, men and women, who had to work, and had been securing Federial Aid for the past several months. We have heard that several who are now on the Federal pay roll in Davie, had quit other jobs, and that a number of farmers had quit their farms, and had registered for a Federal job. With the government paying from 45c to $1.10 per hour for this labor, no private individual or corporation can compete with Uncle Sam. Persons who are not in need of this work, or those who leave other jobs because the CWA pays higher wages, should not be employed. A check-up occasionally wouldn't be a bad idea.

Here's What Happened In One Hour.

In one hour:

Five thousand, four hundred and forty human beings are born into the world and 4,630 die.

One thousand two hundred couples are married and 85 disillusioned couples seek release in the divorce courts.

On an average, 198 500 crimes are committed, but of these only 177,000 are punished.

Factories are at work on 1 000 tons of animal and 300 tons of botanical wool.

Ninety nine thousand, six hundred tons of sugar are being produced, but of thic nomber only 98,000 tons are consumed

One hundred and seventy-six tons of rough tobacco are being cultivated, which means cigarettes, cigars and pipe tobacco to the value of $1,500,000,000

Three and one half million pints of wine, 1,250,000 pints of beer, and 50,000,000 cups of coffee are being drunk.

Fifty million pounds of potatoes, 8,500,000 pounds of meat, 70 000,000 pounds of bread, and 2,500,000 eggs are eaten.

Average wages range from 2 cents to $100 per hour. The former is paid to a Chinese coolie, the latter to the president of an American electrical trust company.

One hundred and fourteen thousand telegrams are delivered all over the world. One billion one hundred forty-one million six hundsed thousand letters, postcards, parcels etc., flow through the mails, and bear stamps to the total value of $25,000,000.

The earth travels 1,114 miles in the journey round the sun, and the is an average of four storm and one earthquake.

The Surest Way.

Union Republican.

Meddling in business family affairs, religion or anything for that matter by outsiders never did help any cause and we are fully in accord with our name-sake the Unionville (Mo.) Republican which says:

"We still believe that the surest way out of our present difficulties is to leave people alone to run their own businesses, for we believe that the man at the helm understands his business and its problems best, and is better equipped to meet whatever problems come. The line should be drawn at the point where one business may begin to enterfere with the point goverment should step in and prevent imposition upon the innocent party. This is the extent to which goverument has any business intertering in the affairs of the people who compose that government to get out of the meddling ousiness, and to attend ly to the business of governing the sooner we shall begin to emerge from our present difficulties. Governing the sooner we shall begin to emerge from our present difficulties. Government meddling at its best is tremendeously expensive, and the cost must be borne by the citizens who comprise that government. That means more taxes, and taxes are to a large extent stiffling our people to death."

To Use The "Old Blue Back."

Rutherford College, in Burke county, which is now operating independently of the Methodist church has adopted Webster's 'Blue Back" speller as a text book this term.

Supt. R L. Patton has arranged for daily studies in orthography in all college classes, deeming it essential to students.

Words like feoffment, panegyrise, peripatetism, ornitholgic, assofoedita, scismatic and paradichlorobenzine will not be stumbling blocks for the Rutherford college students when they complete the course, Mr. Patton said.

THE DAVIE RECORD.

C. FRANK STROUD - - Editor.
Member National Farm Grange.

TELEPHONE 1

Entered at the Postoffice in Mocksville, N. C., as Second-class Mail matter. March 3, 1903.

SUBSCRIPTION RATES:

ONE YEAR. IN ADVANCE - $1 00
SIX MONTHS, IN ADVANCE - $ 50

Here's wishing everybody, everv where, a Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year.

The happy Christmas season is here when we should all strive to do unto others as we should have them do unto us.

Here's hoping that the weather this Christmas will not be like it was in 1915 and 1917. Those were the two worst Decembers in fifty years.

Those who are financially able. should help those who are less fortunate. Here's hoping that not a single little child in Davie will be missed by Santa Claus this Christmas.

The Record office will open daily all this and next week for the bene fit of our hundreds of subscribers who will want to renew their subscriptions before the arrival of the new year. If you are not coming to town, or if you live out of the county, mail us a check, money order, frog skin or express order in time to reach us before Christmas.

The Record would make an ex cellent Christmas present. Send a year's subscription to your father, mother, son. or daughter, uncle, aunt or cousin who is living in some other county or state. It will be like a letter from home, and the cost is only one dollar for a full year. No other gift at the same price would be more highly appreciated.

John A. McDaniel, who lives on the Pacific coast, more than three thousand miles away, writes us as follows: "Please enter my subscription for another year. I always look forward to receiving The Record every Monday morning following publication." John is in Washington state, and we are glad he enjoys reading his old home county paper, even if it is nearly a week old when he gets it.

No Paper Next Week.

The Record will not appear next week. Our custom has been for more than twenty five years to give our readers and our office force a week's vacation between Christmas and New Years. We hope to greet our many readers again on Wednesday, Jan. 3rd. 1934.

During the past year The Record has labored daily to help not only the town and county, but all its readers who are scattered between the Atlantic and Pacific. It has been our aim to help make this a better world in which to live. We have made many mistakes during the past 52 weeks, but they were mistakes of the head and not of the heart. We have tried to give every subscriber and advertiser a fair deal. We have not misrepresented facts and have not tried to whitewash the evils and call them good. Our one idea was to print a paper that all the family could read and enjoy. We have left out much sordid news and gossip, and have tried to print more good news than bad. The failures of our friends and those who spitefully use us have been covered with the cloak of charity. We have tried to deal fairly with all those who have had dealings with us.

To all of our friends and patrons everywhere, regardless of religions or political creeds, and to everybody throughout this broad land, we wish a very Merry Christmas and a happy and prosperous New Year. We will strive to serve you better during 1934 than we have in all the years that have gone by since we cast our lot in Davie over a quarter of a century ago. When we can help you in any way, call on us. The latch string at our shop is always on the outside.

The First Christmas.

Luke, 2:8-14

8. And there were in the same country shepherds abiding in the field, keeping watch over their flock by night.

9 And, lo, the angel of the Lord came upon them, and the glory of the Lord show around them: and they were sore afraid

10. And the angel said unto them Fear not: for behold I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people.

11. For unto you is born this day in the city of David a Savior, which is Christ the Lord.

12 And this shall be a sign unto you: You shall find the babe wrapped in swaddling cloths, lying in a manger.

13 And suddenly there was with the angel a multitute of the heavely host priasing God and saying

14. Glory to God in the highest and on earth, peace, good will toward men."

Announcing

NEW FORD V-8 for 1934

THE UNIVERSAL CAR

The New Ford V-8 for 1934 is now on display at the showrooms of Ford dealers. Surpassing even the great Ford of 1933 in economy, beauty and comfort, it is truly the car of this modern age—the culmination of thirty years Ford progress. It combines the proved performance of the V-8 cylinder engine with two important new features—Dual Carburetion and perfected Clear-vision Ventilation. See this car today and drive it at the first opportunity.

OUTSTANDING IMPROVEMENTS IN THE NEW FORD V-8

BETTER PERFORMANCE. Greater power, new speed, quicker acceleration, smoother performance, more miles per gallon especially at higher speeds, and quicker starting in cold weather—all these result from the new dual carburetor and dual intake manifold. New waterline thermostats enable the engine to warm up more quickly and to maintain an efficient operating temperature. Added engine refinements reduce oil consumption, further improve operating economy and reduce maintenance costs.

NEW VENTILATION SYSTEM permits clear vision, prevents drafts and provides desired amount of fresh air in any weather. Individual control for front and rear side windows. When ventilation is desired the window glass is raised to the top. Then the handle is given an additional half-turn. This slides the glass back horizontally to form a narrow slot. Through this slot air is drawn out by the forward motion of the car. This simple ventilation system maintains draft-free circulation, insures passenger comfort, prevents fogging windshield in cold or stormy weather. Both windshield and cowl ventilator can be opened to supply additional air needed for comfortable warm-weather driving.

DISTINCTIVE NEW APPEARANCE enhanced by the newly designed chromium-plated radiator shell and grille, new hood louvres, new hub caps. Interiors are attractive, with new tufted upholstery, new mouldings, new cove-type headlining, new instrument panel, new arm rests, new hardware. Swivel-type sun visors in De Luxe bodies prevent glare from front or side.

FENDERS IN COLOR. On De Luxe cars fenders are in color to harmonize with body colors —wheel colors optional. New enamel finish on all bodies and fenders has greater wearing quality and more enduring luster.

GREATER RIDING COMFORT results from increased spring flexibility. The spring leaves are newly designed for quieter and easier action. Shock absorbers are improved. Seat cushions are deeper, with new, softer springs. New type, individual bucket seats provide increased comfort for front-seat passengers in the Tudor Sedan. Adding to comfort is the new driving ease of the 15-to-1 steering gear ratio.

PRICES REMAIN LOW—Tudor Sedan, $535. Coupe, $515. Fordor Sedan, $585. De Luxe Tudor, $575. De Luxe Fordor, $625. De Luxe Coupe (5 windows), $555. De Luxe Coupe (3 windows), $555. De Luxe Roadster, $525. De Luxe Phaeton, $550. Cabriolet, $590. Victoria, $610. (All prices f. o. b. Detroit.)

Expressing Himself

Editor Record:—At your request for letters in regard to a county farm agent for Davie county, I will give my humble opinion. An effort for advancement must fall or stand on its merits.

For the advancement of farm production a farm demonstration agent could help us. For corpera tion extension work to advance co-operation it is in question. If we wish to become industrial subjects of our Government and have our industrial activities controlled by our Government than we should support an agent.

If we wish to continue a free industrial people then co-operation should be managed and only by individuals, and subject to our courts only. Just as other industrial instutions are subject to them, both civil and criminal, and we would need no agent to extend co-operation.

Shall we become industrial subject of our Government or shall we as individuals control our industry?

Very truly,

Young Southern Farmer Wins Again!

This photograph shows Dan Bickley, 4-H Club Member of Lexington, S. C., with his 10-ear corn exhibits which won sweepstakes honors over all corn exhibited at the South Carolina State Fair, 1933. Second prize also was awarded to this young farmer.

Both of his samples were of Belmont White-Dent corn and taken from one of his club acres on which he averaged a yield of 54 bushels. Mr. Bickley used 350 lbs of 8-4-4 mixed fertilizer at planting time and side-dressed his prize producing field with 100 lbs of ARCADIAN Nitrate of Soda per acre.

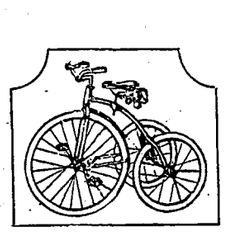

This is the sixth time in seven years he has taken first prize, while in 1927 and again in 1930 he was also awarded the handsome trophies presented by the Southern Railway for the best corn produced in eight southern states Virginia. North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Alabama, Mississippi, Kentucky and Tennessee. Since Mr. Bickley first started to use ARCADIAN Nitrate of Soda for side-dressing, his average yield through good seasons and bad seasons is over 52 bushels per acre. a highly creditable result for this young Southern farmer.

Mr. Bickley knows the value of fertilization and gives full credit to the American-made Nitrate of Soda for its part in producing his year-after-year prize winners.

Lesson for December 24

A VISION OF WORLD PEACE

LESSON TEXT—Isaiah 11:1-9.

GOLDEN TEXT—They shall not hurt nor destroy in all my holy mountain; for the earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea. Isaiah 11:9.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Peace on Earth.

JUNIOR TOPIC—The Prince of Peace.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—What Does Christmas Mean.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—A Christian Christmas.

Isaiah does not set forth merely an ideal for a world at strife. The fact is revealed that Jesus Christ shall come back to the earth and establish a kingdom, and remove from men's hearts the cause of strife. Instead of a vision of "World Peace" a better statement of the subject would be "The Universal Reign of Jesus Christ."

I. Who Is This King? (v. 1).

1. He is the Son of Man. "A child is born" (Isa. 9:6). The one who shall reign over all the world as king is a real human being. The eternal Son of God, incorporated with the human race in order to be its Saviour and Lord, shall come of David's line.

2. He is the Son of God. "A son is given" (Isa. 9:6). As the eternal Son of God he was not "born" but "given." This son "given" is the "Mighty God," the "Everlasting Father." Being such he will take the government upon his shoulders," that is, he will assume all authority. He is "Wonderful." The world will marvel at him. He is the all-wise "Counsellor." Therefore there will be no mistake made in his conduct of the affairs of the kingdom. He is the "Prince of Peace."

II. The King's Qualification (v. 2).

The king which the world needs and for which it longs must have superhuman wisdom and power. There shall rest upon him:

1. "The spirit of the Lord."

2. "The spirit of wisdom," giving insight into all things, human and divine.

3. "The spirit of understanding," giving him the ability to use that which is highest and best.

4. "The spirit of counsel," enabling him intelligently to plan and administer the affairs of the kingdom.

5. "The spirit of might"—ability to execute his plans.

6. "The spirit of knowledge," enabling him to perceive the will of God in all things.

7. "The fear of the Lord," causing him to be reverential and obedient.

III. The Character of the King's Reign (vv. 3-5).

1. "He shall not judge at the sight of his eyes." His knowledge is perfect. None can deceive him.

2. "Not reprove after the hearing of the ear." The word "reproof" means decide. His decisions, therefore will be on the basis of fact, not of heresay.

3. "With righteousness shall he judge the poor." When Christ reigns as king the poor shall get justice.

4. "Shall smite the earth with the rod of his might." By the "earth" is meant the wicked inhabitants.

5. "He shall be girded with righteousness and faithfulness." He is absolutely righteous and will faithfully carry out all his words.

IV. The Issue of the King's Reign (vv. 6-10).

Here is a picture of the glorious golden age of which poets have sung and for which the great and wise men of all the ages have longed and looked. There will then be peace both between men and animals.

1. "The wolf shall dwell with the lamb" (v. 6). The word "dwell" suggests intimacy as if the lamb should receive the wolf into its home.

2. "The leopard shall lie down with the kid" (v. 6).

3. "The calf and the young lion and the fatling together" (v. 6). They are to be gentle and kind that a little child shall lead them.

4. "The cow and the bear shall feed" (v. 7).

5. "The lion shall eat straw" (v. 7). The lion shall no longer prey upon other animals for food.

6. "The suckling child shall play on the hole of the asp" (v. 8).

7. "The earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord" (v. 9). The issue of this glorious reign shall be the attraction of the Gentile nations (vv. 10-12). This is the real purpose of the coming kingdom.

Piety Comes First

No student can afford to say, as we unfortunately do, "I will secure my education first and my religion afterward." Religion is a value so important that it cannot safely be postponed or side-tracked in favor of any other concern.

How Sweet Is Rest!

Rest! How sweet the sound! It is melody to my ears! It lies as a reviving cordial at my heart, and from thence sends forth lively spirits which run through all the pulses of my soul!—Baxter.

"As a Man Thinketh"

Fruit Cake of High Quality

Many Ways of Making It, but All Have One Common Foundation—Liberality in Fruit for the Mixture Is Indispensable.

The other day, says a writer on home economics, some one asked me to define different types of fruit cakes according to their native origin. I quite blithely answered, "Why, certainly! English fruit cake is usually dark and southern fruit cake is usually light!" Then, upon looking up recipes in numerous books in my collection, I discovered that I had been too quick in my response. I was answering out of my experience in English and southern homes. I finds that the cook books do not agree with my own experiences and so I think I shall have to designate my fruit cake recipes in some other way, perhaps by their color.

While fruit cake recipes vary, they are all alike in one respect—they must contain plenty of fruit. The mixture which holds them together may be flavored in a variety of ways, and these flavorings are not only responsible for the variation in taste but also for the variation in color. The fruit content varies from the simplest type, which contains only raisins, to the most elaborate, which may have citron, apricots, pineapple, figs, currants, dates, or cherries, candied fruit peels, and almonds or pecans in addition. Old fruit cake recipes call for brandy or sherry to furnish the liquid. In the absence of these you will find fruit juices, cider, jelly, and coffee useful.

No matter what type of cake you decide to make, you must give it a long baking or combined steaming and baking. Some people find that the easiest way to bake a fruit cake is to steam it first! It will take about two and a half to three hours steaming and then it may be finished by taking an hour longer in a slow oven, to dry it out. A reader asks me to mention the type of utensils used when cakes and puddings are steamed. A regular "steamer" is, of course, easiest. Anything put in this type of steamer must be tightly covered with tin or oiled or parchment paper, or cellophane, held tightly in place by a rubber band or a string. If you haven't a steamer, you can easily manufacture one by using a large kettle and placing your puddings or cakes on a trivet or rack. You will have to renew the water more often in this makeshift arrangement, but it will be perfectly satisfactory.

Naturally the length of time for baking depends upon the size of the cake. Very small cakes will bake in an hour and a quarter, while the large cakes take as much as three hours. To prevent its browning too quickly, it is sometimes covered with paper, or if you are using a glass baking dish you may use the cover which comes with it. After the mixture is in the pans you may decorate the top with candied cherries and almonds in artistic arrangement.

I wonder if you have seen the ready-to-mix and bake fruit cake mixtures which have come on the market? Fruits and nuts of excellent quality cut in large pieces, as they should be for good and true fruit cakes, are combined with the dry ingredients ready for you to add the liquid. One of these products comes in a pan which is lined with paper into which the cake mixture may be put back and baked. This pan may also be used with its cover for storing the cake. You will also find excellent ready baked fruit cakes in fancy boxes suitable for Christmas gifts.

One of my friends, an expert, who is the owner and manager of a well-known restaurant, told me a very interesting thing about keeping fruit cakes. After the cakes are baked and put away for storage she covers them with a layer of brown sugar, which keeps them moist and develops the flavors. I am passing this very valuable hint on to you. And don't forget that the sooner you make your cakes the better they will be at Christmas time!

Dark Fruit Cake

1 pound citron.
1 pound candied apricots.
1 pound candied pineapple.
1 pound candied cherries.
3 pounds seeded raisins.
1 pound currants.
½ pound raw almonds.
½ pound flour.
1 teaspoon baking powder.
1 teaspoon cinnamon.
½ teaspoon cloves.
1 teaspoon nutmeg.
½ pound butter.
½ pound brown sugar.
6 eggs.
1½ cups cider.
Yield—10 pounds.

Cut into thin slices the citron, pineapple and apricots. Cut the cherries. Wash the raisins and currants and dry them. Blanch and chop the almonds. Mix these ingredients together. Sift flour with baking powder and spices. Combine fruit and flour mixtures thoroughly. Cream the butter and sugar. Add the egg yolks and then the cider and jelly alternately with the fruit mixture. Beat the egg whites until stiff and fold them into the fruit mixture. Grease the bottoms and sides of glass baking dishes and fill about three-fourths full. Decorate tops of cake with candied cherries and almonds. Cover and bake in a slow oven, 275 degrees Fahrenheit, 1¼ to 3 hours. The length of baking time will depend on the size of the baking dishes.

Honey Fruit Cake

1 pound currants.
½ pound citron.
¼ pound candied orange peel.
¼ pound candied cherries.
½ pound dates.
½ pound figs.
½ pound blanched almonds.
½ pound flour.
½ pound shortening.
½ pound sugar.
6 eggs (well beaten).
1 cup sour milk.
1 cup honey.
½ cup currant jelly.
1½ teaspoons salt.
2 teaspoons cinnamon.
¼ teaspoon cloves.
1 teaspoon allspice.
¾ teaspoon soda.
1 teaspoon baking powder.

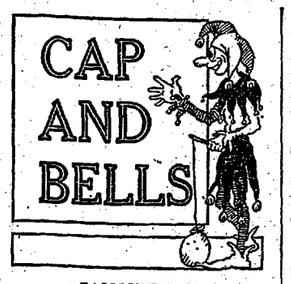

Chop fruit and nuts and dredge with one-half cup flour. Cream shortening and sugar until light and add the eggs, sour milk, honey, jelly. Mix thoroughly. Sift the remainder of the flour with the salt, spices, soda and baking powder and sift into the egg mixture. Beat until smooth and stir in the dredged fruit and nuts. Pour into well-greased baking dishes. Bake at 275 degrees Fahrenheit for 2½ hours. One-half hour before the cakes are done remove from the oven, brush over with honey and decorate as desired. Return to the oven to finish baking. Cool and then place covers on baking dishes, and if allowed to ripen three weeks or longer the cakes will be better. Makes nine pounds.

CAMOUFLAGE

Biggs, the manager of the restaurant, was talking in undertones to his head chef.

Afterwards he called all his waitresses into his private office.

"Girls," he said, "I want you all to look your very best today. Add an extra dab of powder to your cheeks and take a little more care with your hair."

"Why, what's the matter?" asked the head waitress. "Butter bad again?"

"No," said the manager; "the beef's tough."—London Tit-Bits.

Stung

"Yes," said the wife, "when I slipped into my husband's office he was giving his stenographer money to buy herself something."

"O-o-o!" exclaimed the cat. "And are you going to sue him for a divorce?"

"Hardly," coldly replied the wife. "He was as mad as a wet hen, and was telling her to go out and buy a dictionary, so she could look up words she didn't know how to spell."

Unfamiliar

A comedian touring in Australia sprung a lot of new jokes on his audience, but didn't get a laugh. Coming off the stage he said to the manager: "What's the matter? Aren't my gags all right?"

"Aye, the gags are a bit of alrighty," soothed the manager, "but, ye see, we've never heard 'em before."—Boston Transcript.

AN EXCEPTION

Throwing back his shoulders and putting on his bravest smile, Mr. Everybody approached the cashier's desk at the income-tax collector's office.

"Good morning!" he said. "I should like to pay my income tax."

"Well," said the cashier, "you're the first!"

"Surely not the first to pay?" exclaimed Mr. Everybody.

The cashier smiled.

"No," he replied, "the first to say he'd like to."

Proof

"My last boarder was a wonderful artist," sighed the landlady, as she hacked at the pie-crust. "He always said he found inspiration in my cooking."

"Ah, a sculptor, I presume," said the new boarder, surveying his bent fork.—Pearson's Magazine.

Story Is Ended

"How are you, Mrs. Browne?"

"Oh, I've nothing to grumble at."

"Mr. Browne away then?"

MANY ARE LIKE THAT

"Why don't you pay a visit to the old home town?"

"I went away in a flivver."

"Well."

"I'm waiting until I can go back in a limousine."

Our Pet Peeve—

AX DEALS BLOW TO OUR "CHRIS"

Columbus Hard Hit by Its Discovery.

Ethnologists have always believed that Columbus was only about 300 years behind the first man to reach the Atlantic seaboard. That—though the population of the American continent started soon after the last Ice age when tribes from the other side of the world crossed Bering strait and filtered slowly southward to inhabit a continent—the first roaming citizens of the Atlantic seaboard arrived from the West only a short lead ahead of the man who has credit for finding the New world.

But discovery of a primitive stone ax, dug up in Albemarle county, Virginia, is serving to upset this theory, in the opinion of officials of the Smithsonian institution, who say that former ideas of when the first inhabitants reached the eastern shores of America are unsound. They now believe that man trod Virginia soil something like 2,000 years ago.

Students of the races read a running story in this new ax that is so old. It was no more than out of the Albemarle county soil that had concealed it so long until it began reciting its tale of age and strange races. Specialists who understand these things say that the primitive ax was chipped out of black diabase rock by some savage American 30 centuries ago and that in time, possibly because of disuse, it became dull and was sharpened again by new and better informed chipping, possibly some 1,300 years ago. Then it was lost for good so far as the stone ax age was concerned, only to be found by scientists of a new day and age, who knew how to interpret the signs of discoloration and wear and other circumstances to determine age and the part earlier races had to do with the population of this side of the earth. These readers of signs leave no point for layman argument. They just move back population history and we agree that that is that.

But it does lay a burden on Columbus. He thought, or may have thought had he lived long enough, that he missed virgin discovery by only 200 years. And we know on the evidence of present-day science that he missed it ten times 200.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Helping the Women

Mrs. Ellen S. Woodward, Jackson (Miss.) social worker, is now in charge of developing useful civil work projects for unemployed women throughout the United States in connection with the federal emergency relief administration's board program. Mrs. Woodward is the widow of Judge Albert Y. Woodward of Mississippi and the daughter of the late William V. Sullivan, former United States senator from Mississippi. She is now on leave of absence from her position of executive secretary of the Mississippi state board of development. She served two terms in the Mississippi state legislature.

FRUIT IN CAKE

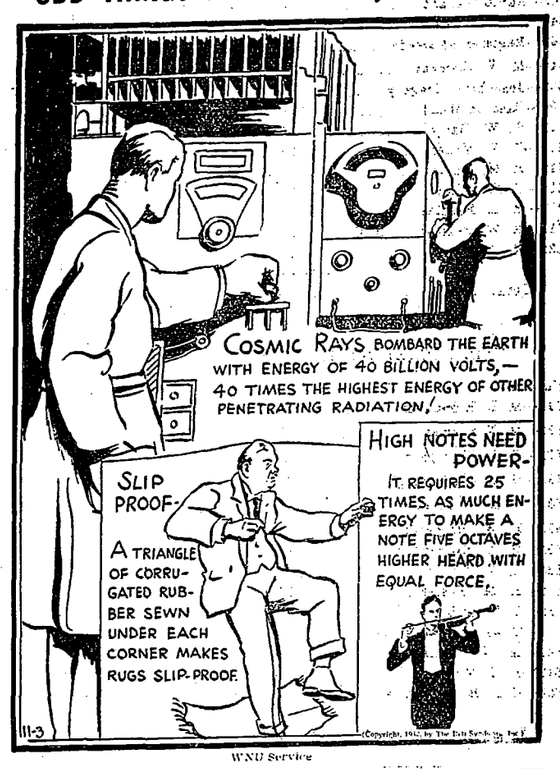

Fruit that is to be used in fruit cake should be rubbed well with flour. This wil prevent it from settling to the bottom.

THE BATH TUB

The best way to clean a white enamel bathtub is to put a little turpentine in a saucer, get a small rag and rub the bathtub all over with the turpentine, then scrub well with soap and warm water. No matter how dirty the bath is, the dirt will disappear like magic.

She Can Shoot, Too

Glenna Collett Vare, whose forte is shooting straight on fairways and greens, can also do a bit of straight shooting with rifle and shotgun. She is an accomplished marksman at the traps, and when seeking game on the wing or hoof. Here she is shown during a match between the trapshooting teams of the Huntington and Valley Forge clubs near Philadelphia.

All Three Going to the Antarctic

Capt. Benedik Johanssen of Norway, ice pilot of the Byrd Antarctic expedition, is shown here with "Nome" and "Snow Shoes," the dog and cat mascots of the expedition, aboard the Bear of Oakland at Bayonne, N. J., where it was awaiting orders from the rear admiral to set sail southward.

"The Common Man"

By LEONARD A. BARRETT

The balance of power has usually rested in the hands of the common man. The leaders in all forward movements have recognized this fact. In one of the most perplexing periods of our national life Woodrow Wilson is said to have remarked, "I do not care so much what the leaders are saying, but I would like to know tonight the thoughts of the common people of this great nation."

The common man holds the balance of power at every election for the simple reason that numerically he is in the majority. The security markets are influenced in their price swing largely by the investments of the common man. The startling confession was recently made by a wealthy broker, that in managing his pool on the stock market it was his custom to sell when the public wanted to buy, and buy when the public was willing to sell. Whatever may be our opinion about the capitalistic system in our country, the fact remains that labor will never cease to be the most important problem in our national recovery movement. To the common man we are indebted for the things we eat and wear. It is conceivable that labor may do without capital but capital can never function without the labor of the common man. In 1929 our factories were turning out more merchandise than they could sell. At the same time, twelve million of our population were existing on the bare necessities of life and twenty million were trying to live on the minimum income of that time. The only way we can have anything is to share it. We tried to keep our financial prosperity within the narrow circle of a small group of persons. We were not willing to share it, therefore we lost it. Efforts to restore our normal economic life will never be successful if we disregard the rights and needs of the common man. He occupies the center of the stage. "It is never well with anybody until it is well with everybody." The spirit of greed and selfishness must be replaced by the spirit of co-operative effort and social justice. "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself."

DOING OUR PART

Everyone knows that whatever a decisive majority of the people want, there are manufacturers to produce these wants until we no longer desire them. Yet it takes money to satisfy these wants. By spending money for food, shelter, clothing, and luxuries, which are the main factors that make up our N. R. A. system of buying, we "do our part." What we want to do in order to help the people and the President of the United States is to put our money in circulation, so it will be widely distributed and will also put more people to work.

Our part is to put money in circulation, yes, but we should do it wisely, avoiding extravagance and impractical buying. When we select from a mass of products something which will serve the special purpose we have in mind, we influence sound merchandising and fair dealing. Today we feel the spirit of fairness of buying and selling when we buy from a store with an N. R. A. sign on its window. Merchants buy for us and we buy from them; thus both parties involved are pleased to the extent that we have tried to "do our part."

Now it is comparatively easy to walk into a good market and arrange a meal to the satisfaction of yourself and everybody else, but we have to remember that one dollar is almost always doing the duty of five. The fact is that this dollar we spend is helping the N. R. A. to pull the nation out of a depression. For if we aren't recovering from a depression why should one dollar be doing the duty of five? If we help public opinion to be aroused and organized, we must not hoard our money like misers, but spend i t,because now is the time to buy to prove that the National Recovery Act will work through the money we spend.

SURE TO HAPPEN

"The second generation has had to change its tune."

Origin of Halo

The word "halo" is derived from the Greek, the word in that language meaning a threshing floor on which trod oxen in a circular path. Halos as seen around the sun and the moon, most frequently in Arctic regions, are probably reflections of light on ice. In art, the halo is emblematic of saintliness.

Snake Traps Self After Swallowing Baby Rabbit

Scio, Ore.—The old story of the snake, the egg and the jug was reacted at the John Griffith farm when a large bull snake entered a rabbit pen and devoured one of the young. His hunger satisfied, he started back through the two-inch mesh wire screen, but was stopped by the bulge of the rabbit inside. The snake was fast and unable to move either way when Griffith arrived and killed him.

CHISLERS BE HANDLED PROMPTLY BY N.R.A. BOARD

Prompt action against chiseling cleaners and dyers was indicated today when National Recovery Administrator Hugh S. Johnson disclosed that more than 100 cleaners in various sections of the country have already been summoned to explain in public hearings to be held in Washington, December 11, alleged violations of the recently approved Cleaners and Dyers Code.

The General himself, it was announced, will conduct the headings and the violators, some of whom have been openly defiant in their refusal to comply with the minimum price provisions of the Code, will be confronted with evidence gathered by Federal Trade Commission investigators cooperating with Deputy Administrator H. B. Ludlum.

The minimum prices, ranging from 65 cents to 95 cents (except in California where a state law fixes a $1 minimum) for cleaning men's suits and women's plain dresses were approved, it was pointed out in the General's formal notice, subject "to further study and a hearing to be held on December 18, 1933, for the purpose of obtaining facts as to the actual effect of the operation of said prices." Pending the outcome of the study and December 18 hearing, every cleaner in the country is bound to comply with the minimum charge provisions.

"Complaints of flagrant violations of the prices established by the administrator having been received" the notice continues, "notice is hereby given that a public hearing will be conducted by the Administrator, beginning at 10 A. M. Monday, December 11, 1933 (instead of December 18, 1933 as heretofore announced) in Room N, U. S. Chamber of Commerce Building, Washington, D. C. and continuing until completed.

LOVE INTEREST IS OUT FOR LEONARD

Withdraws From Ranks of Those Seeking Mate.

Chicago.—Leonard Lippoldt, 29 years old, has, he affirms, definitely withdrawn from the ranks of those seeking a mate. The love life of Leonard recently caused him considerable anguish and threatened to land him in jail.

The troubles of Lippoldt began when his sweetheart called him and told him that she loved another. Fresh from the rebuff Leonard met Fred F. Peabody, forty-two years old, 2100 West Madison street, a former union business agent, and told him of his love trouble.

"You should have her new sweety slugged," Peabody suggested. "Your girl won't like him nearly so well if you have his features sort of shifted."

"A capital idea," said Lippoldt, "but where does one buy sluggers?"

"I will gladly do the job for a down payment of $20," Peabody told him.

The money was paid and Leonard sat back to await a telephone call from his sweetheart. Instead came Peabody.

"I'm afraid I went a little too far," the former business agent confided. "I shot him 18 times. He may die."

Convinced that he was equally guilty with Peabody, Lippoldt paid $15 to insure silence. When the request for additional payments became more urgent, Lippoldt decided to give himself up. He sought the public defender and announced that he was in need of a good defense.

The visit resulted in the arrest and confession of Peabody.

"I was merely playing Lippoldt for a sucker," Peabody told the police.

"How about Lippoldt's rival?" he was asked.

"I never saw him," Peabody replied.

"Who is he?" the policeman asked Lippoldt.

"Come to think of it," said Lippoldt in some astonishment, "I don't even know him myself."

Peabody pleaded guilty and was sentenced to 60 days in the house of correction on a charge of obtaining money under false pretenses.

DRINK MILK

A quart of milk for the child, a pint for the adult, daily, with whole grain cereals, with leafy and other vegetables, besides the potato, and with the citrus and other fruits, will protect the body against disease and make for good health.

SUGAR IN SOUP

A couple of pinches of brown sugar put into soup that is too salty will remove the salty taste and still not sweeten the soup.

Near Brownwood, Texas, a freight train killed a cow belonging to a Scandinavian. The claim-agent was making as strong a case for the railroad as was possible.

"Mr. Swanson," he said, the company wants to be absolutely fair with you in this matter. We deeply regret that you lost your cow. But, Mr. Swanson, in the first place, that cow had no business straying on our right of way and you, as her owner, should not have permitted her to do so. Alas, Bossy might have caused a derailment of the engine. Now, such being the case, what do you think would be a fair basis of settlement as between you and our road?"

"Vell, Ay bane poor Swede farmer," Swanson replied, "but Ay could give you two dollars."—Wall Street Journal.

REDUCTION OF TOBACCO

The sign-up drive for North Carolina tobacco growers to reduce their production is under way. A number of tobacco growers signed the reduction agreements last fall and will continue to do so this fall. E. Y. Floyd, State College tobacco specialist, in charge of the drive, stated that arrangements are being made to mail out contracts to all farm agents in the state.

Much time is being spent explaining these contracts to the farmers so they will be able to fill them out properly without having to return them for correction. If tobacco growers could be convinced that by reducing their production they would stabilize prices for the eventual betterment of the industry, little trouble would be experienced in getting their signatures on the agreements.

TRANSCONTINENTAL "SNAKE" TRAIN TO BE BUILT

Chicago—A six-car aluminum serpent-like "tube" train for transcontinental runs will be constructed shortly in the Pullman shops here for the Union Pacific railroad, it was learned. Three units of the train will carry sleeping compartments, the first that Pullman facilities will be incorporated in a train of this type.

The train will be similar to the three-unit train now under construction at Pullman, Ill., for the Union Pacific. Its purpose, however, will be to attract long-haul travel, while the shorter day-coach train is intended for active competition with buses.

Officials said the train probably will be put in service between Los Angeles and Chicago after it has been tested.

Speeds of well over 100 miles an hour will be permitted by the use of a 900-horse power Diesel engine.

SYNOPSIS

A pretty young woman finds herself in a taxicab in New York with a strange man who addresses her endearingly and speaks of "an awful shock." When he leaves her for a moment at a drug store she drives on, for she fears him. She stops at the Biltmore, still wondering who she is. Her memory is gone. From her expensive clothing she concludes she is married to a wealthy man. She meets a young woman who speaks of her desire to go to Reno for a divorce, if she can get the money. The woman vanishes with the nameless girl's purse and $900. An elderly woman, Mrs. Oscar Du Val, cordially greets the nameless girl, addressing her as "Doris," wife of Mrs. Du Val's son, Rocky. Rocky is abroad, and Doris, bewildered, is taken to the home of Mrs. Du Val and her sculptor husband, Oscar.

The last box contained merely hats and shoes to go with the dresses. Doris Du Val didn't believe in carrying papers around, evidently.

The search had yielded the information that yellow and lavender were her favorite colors and that she had undoubtedly been rich. Nothing more.

Was Rocky really her husband? She peered again with strained eyes into the pictured face. If he could only speak! If he could only tell her who she was, where they had met. Gently, gradually, she felt sure she would come back to connection with her past if she could only see him.

It seemed to her as she looked into those serious boyish eyes as if she must remember. Surely the time he had given her the ring. Some of that might come back. She sat turning the ring over and over and pondering. But it was useless.

Mrs. Du Val tapped on the door softly. An hour had passed in these thoughts.

"Come in," said Doris.

'Oh, oh! C'est tres mauvais! Veree bad! You must rest. At such a time young girls must rest, and not tire themselves out."

Doris was getting rather weary of being told that at "such a time" she must take care of herself. The such a time seemed to be always. But she smiled. "I was just going to get dressed for dinner."

"Oh no," said Mrs. Du Val. "We live very simply. Do not dress tonight. It is too exhausting at such a—"

'I'll just wash my face then," said Doris hastily. She disappeared into the bathroom half expecting to be told that "at such a time" girls shouldn't wash. Then she smiled ruefully, ashamed of her impatience.

The drawing room was attractive with flowers and books. Alone there for a moment Doris looked about for a newspaper. Unable to find one, she turned on the radio.

Instantly an orchestra blared. An avalanche of jazz poured into the room, flooded the whole quiet countryside. Almost immediately there was another and larger roar from the hall outside. Oscar Du Val, his white hair disarranged, his black eyes rolling angrily, rushed in.

"Turn it off! Turn it off!" he shouted.

Amazed and frightened, Doris ran to obey. As the sound was cut off, Du Val looked at her blushing furiously. "I am sorry," he said, "I am very sorry. I did not think it was you. The servants have orders never to touch the radio."

"I didn't know," said Doris. "I'm sorry."

Mrs. Du Val had darted into the room.

"Roaring like a mad bull at our little girl," she scolded.

Du Val looked heartbroken. "Oh, I am so sorry."

"Making noise like one hundred elephants and frightening our little girl at such a time!"

But Oscar Du Val now looked more frightened than Doris.

Mrs. Du Val turned to Doris. "You see what it is to live with an artist. You can thank your stars that I brought up my son to be a business man. Oscar cannot work with the radio going. He does not like to have the outside world come to him."

"Yes, to be told I must wash my teeth every day. Me, I have never been to the dentist in my life."

"He will not have anything come into the house. No radio! No newspapers! Such a man! We never play the radio except on Sunday afternoons when we love to listen to the Philharmonic concerts."

"Yes," said Oscar eagerly. He looked at Doris as if pleading with her to understand. "The Philharmonic concerts are very nice. I like them very much."

The evening passed quickly. Listening to the talk of the famous sculptor, Doris nearly forgot all about her own worry. She felt that if she had not already fallen in love with the son, she might find herself tempted to marry him anyway for the pleasure of having such a father-in-law.

"Rockwell St. Gardens is a great friend of yours, isn't he?" asked Doris when the talk had come to a little pause.

"Ah, yes," said Oscar. "A great friend. We named our Rocky for him. His work is magnificent—magnificent. You know it of course?"

"Oh yes," said Doris, a little surprised to find that she did. "I suppose," she said after a pause in which she considered how she happened to have this particular piece of knowledge, "that he is like you. I mean—every one knows something of his work."

"Yes, he has become very famous. It is hard to realize that. I remember him always as a wild crazy one in Paris. We were young then, n'est-ce pas? But now we are so no longer. And I—I have my practical little wife, my fine son who has his own good wife, and Rockwell St. Gardens lives very respectably too—up in northern New England near the Canadian border, where it is too cold for me."

"Early in July we will visit him," said Mrs. Du Val. "We will go up to his daughter's wedding."

"Yes," said Oscar, "that is so. Beatrice is to be married in July."

Mrs. Du Val's voice often trembled on a note of ecstasy so fragile that overtones of despair and sadness could be heard beyond her joy. "Rocky will be back by then and we will all go together."

Doris felt the tremor of happiness behind the mother's words. It caught a response in her. Could it possibly be true that in six weeks she would be the normal, happy, remembering wife of Rocky? It must be so.

She went to bed early. The sounds of bullfrogs and crickets lulled her quickly to sleep. Her last thought was that she would wake up in the morning knowing all about her past.

But the next day everything was the same. She felt secure and full of happiness. She was in her right place, and Rocky's picture was on her dressing table.

She thought of her new family. Mrs. Du Val—"Mother" was a dear, and she seemed really to like Doris. She reviewed her eventful yesterday with tranquility. All that fright about the man in the cab had been so useless, so silly. Anyway, it was all before she knew that she had this quiet refuge, before she had even seen Rocky's picture. She took it up now and studied it thoughtfully for the twentieth time.

Her husband! Where had she met him? How long had she known him? Not long, apparently. She had gathered this from her welcome.

And yet Mrs. Du Val had met her before. Mrs. Du Val had recognized her in the Biltmore! Or had she? Doris shut her eyes again, and tried to imagine the scene. Mrs. Du Val's greeting had been something about how beautiful she was. Could it be possible that Mrs. Du Val as well as her husband had never seen Rocky's wife before?

It was too confusing. Today her memory would return. It must! It would! It had to!

But it just didn't. The more she willed to know, the more the curtain of the past seemed to shut down on her, blanker than the unknown future on which she could at least make a few tentative plans of her own. As spring passed it seemed strange to be married to a photograph, married to someone who was a topic of conversation at every breakfast, luncheon and dinner, and yet whom she had never seen.

The days were always the same. Doris could understand why Rocky didn't come home much if he were at all the type that liked gaiety. For at nine o'clock promptly every night the family went to bed. And at six o'clock the next morning it was time to get up. From six-thirty until noon Mr. Du Val worked in his studio.

After lunch he worked again. Meanwhile his wife occupied herself with the house, superintending the gardening, the dairies, the farm. Aside from her work in running the huge place, Mrs. Du Val spent much of her time in acting as a guard to her husband against the outside world. Hardly a day passed that did not bring a group of tourists eager to see the sculptor at his work. His wife kept them away from him. If she hadn't it would have soon become impossible for him to work, for they would have swamped him, overwhelmed him. He lived in his work, and he was utterly dependent on his wife, who made it possible for him to work so steadily and ardently.

"It is dull for you here, Doris?" he would say sometimes at lunch.

"No, no. I love the quiet of the country. And besides there's really a lot to do."

"Yes," said Mrs. Du Val. "We sew, we make new curtains for Doris and Rocky's bedroom."

Doris was really learning a great deal. Already the peas and asparagus were being canned in the big kitchen She had helped start dandelion wine, seen the red currants come off the bushes, watched them bubble in enormous pots. Mrs. Du Val was making bar-le-duc "such as you will not get, my Doris, this side of the water."

There was a batch of new setter puppies. Doris was weaning them. This occupied much of her attention. Then there were many vases in the big house to be filled with flowers. This had become Doris' task. There was, as Doris had said, a lot to do. And she enjoyed doing it.

Every night she fell asleep dreaming about Rocky. She had moments it is true, of doubting that anyone could be so perfect as the son Mrs. Du Val talked of constantly. But when she looked into his pictured eyes she believed them all. Somewhere in the blank past he had told her that he loved her. They had married each other. She almost believed she remembered it.

Besides his mother's stories, she had listened to his father's description (tinged with a humorous irony) of Rocky's business career. And gradually she had formed a picture of this Rocky Du Val to whom she was married. He emerged now as a lover, a person more real than anyone she had ever met. She looked eagerly toward the day when he would write to her because she thought that certainly when she looked at the intimate words of her husband, written to her, his wife, she would remember and know for all time what she still groped and wondered over.

Meantime she thought of him as being the tall careless type fond of outdoor life. "He likes outdoor life when it isn't too strenuous," Mr. Du Val had chuckled. Mrs. Du Val said that like his father he made friends everywhere, but he had inherited his keen business sense from his mother. He had had a recent promotion in his firm which would send him to Paris frequently.

But no letter came. A week passed, and another week. June came, bringing roses and peonies, a festive setting for Rocky's return. Then Mrs. Du Val got a letter from him, but of Doris it said only, "Doris strikes me as being very husky, so there is no need to worry about her. Just see that she gets plenty of sunshine and goes to bed early every night."

This sounded far from loverlike and Doris felt suddenly cold all over when Mrs. Du Val read it aloud to her. Mrs. Du Val seemed also to feel some lack in it, for she said consolingly, "Your letter will come tomorrow."

But it didn't come, though Doris began wistfully to watch for the mailman's daily visits. The words, "there is no need to worry about her," made Doris wonder again if her young husband did know of the condition in which she found herself mentally. Had the Du Vals, after all, suspected it? Was that why Mrs. Du Val was constantly fussing over her, urging gentle exercise on her, making her take naps, begging her to take sunbaths, and forever babbling about, "such a time?"

No. That was impossible. The Du Vals showed no sign of guessing that Doris could not remember anything. Yet Rocky's letter left her more than slightly disquieted. The old doubts came back. Supposing she were not Rocky's wife. Supposing Mrs. Du Val had mistaken her in the Biltmore? What on earth should she do if Rocky came back and repudiated her?

She spent hours brooding now on this situation. She ought to go to New York and make some effort to locate her rightful place. Supposing her memory never came back? For over a month had passed now, and she was beginning to lose that first expectancy that had buoyed up her spirits.

"What is the matter, Doris? You look pale today. You need rest."

"No, no, I'm all right." Rest meant returning to her nightmare imaginings: if Rocky was not her husband then she must go back to the other.

"Tell me what is troubling you, dear?"

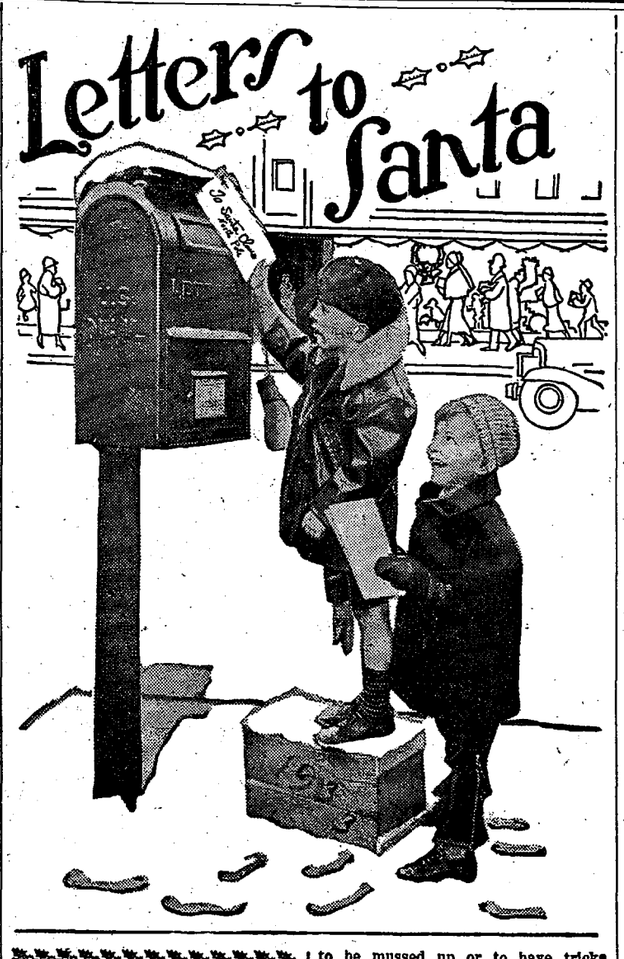

She considered taking Mrs. Du Val into her confidence. If she found out that Doris had lost her memory there was no telling what she would do. As it was, she was always talking about taking Doris to the doctor. She could not tell Mrs. Du Val now after all these weeks of deception.

But she really ought to go into New York and see if she couldn't find out something. Supposing she went to Tange's—the store where she had bought most of her trousseau. The label with its Fifth avenue address was on all of her clothes. Perhaps some clerk there would recognize her, and tell her for sure if she was Mrs. Rockwell Du Val. That was something she must do before Rocky came home. And he was due home in a week.

CYNTHIA'S CHRISTMAS

by Martha Banning Thomas

CYNTHIA tried to be gay over the holiday parties, but somehow she just couldn't get into the spirit of things. With sun shining, flowers growing, and a warm wind from the sea, nothing seemed right. "I like snow and sleigh-bells, and feet creaking. Can't help it; this is lovely, but —" she would fall into wistful silence, and her dancing partner would be puzzled and a little hurt.

Cynthia had not heard from Sam for a long while. Perhaps he was forgetting her. They had been such good friends always and lately a new warmth and tenderness had crept into their relationship—that is just before Cynthia had left for the west coast. But probably Sam was very busy. Probably he didn't get time to write. Oh, well . . . And her eyes would become misty with looking, not at the immediate beauty of shore and sea, or lovely gardens, but at far away things.

Sam lived next door in the old days, a rough little boy who tumbled her curls, made fun of the way she switched her skirts, washed her face with the greatest rudeness in snow, and once, quite by accident, nearly killed her.

Sitting one day under an orange tree, she reviewed that episode, and it all came back to her as clearly as if she were seven years old instead of twenty-two. Sam had called to her to come out to play. She hesitated, knowing how rough and unmannerly he might become. She was wearing a new muff with a ribbon round her neck and a little blue bonnet that matched her eyes. She did not wish to be mussed up or to have tricks played upon her.

"Aw, 'fraid pussy! 'Fraid pussy!" he had taunted her. So she came down the steps, and soon they were playing together in the snow, and Sam wasn't as rough as usual. It was the day before Christmas and after a while Sam began describing the things he wanted. Among them was a small cannon. "With a ball that goes bang . . . like this!" Before Cynthia quite knew what happened, Sammy had hit her with something icy cold and hard. She fell over, and did not know anything for a long time. When she came to, Sam's red, agonized face bent over hers. "I didn't mean to hit you . . . it slipped . . . I was just showing you about the cannon ball. I'm sorry . . . please, please . . . don't be dead!" That episode had sealed their friendship. It had just naturally gone on for years after this.

Christmas Eve there was a package for her. It was a little heavy and quite cold. "Came in a refrigerator car," said the errand boy, "and had to be delivered packed in ice."

Cynthia undid wet wrappings. In the last one she found a snow-ball. On it, traced in small red berries were these words, "You don't need a snowball to knock me cold. Merry Christmas. Love, Sam."

"Can you tune out these little stations with it?"

"Well, I was listening to a quartet the other night, an' I didn't like the tenor, so I just tuned him out and listened to the three of 'em."—Missouri-Pacific Magazine.

National Prohibition Passes Out and Foreign Liquor Comes In—Johnson Put in Control of AAA Codes—Will Budget Director Douglas Resign?

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

NATIONAL prohibition went into the discard on December 5. State conventions in Pennsylvania, Ohio and Utah ratified the repeal amendment on that day, making the necessary thirty-six, and immediately on being notified by telegraph, President Roosevelt and Acting Secretary of State William Phillips issued proclamations that the Eighteenth amendment was no longer a part of the Constitution. In twenty-four of the forty-eight states the manufacture and sale of liquor now is or soon will be legal. The state laws under which it can be sold vary from those providing "wide open" saloons in Nevada to a strict system of dispensing hard liquor in Montana only through state-owned stores, one in every county. Most widely enacted of the laws is one providing for serving of hard liquor only with meals.

Joseph H. Choate, Jr.

Governmental agencies in Washington were swamped with preparatory measures to deal with the importation of foreign liquors, many huge cargoes of which were waiting for entry; and with the federal restrictions necessary to protect the states that remain dry. Joseph H. Choate, Jr., of New York, son of the famous lawyer and statesman, had been appointed director of the federal alcohol control administration, and he arrived in the capital to take up his duties. Mr. Choate halted the issuance of import permits until a few hours before repeal became an accomplished fact, and in the meantime officials checked the financial standing of importers and worked out quotas for foreign countries.

It was understood that between four and five million gallons of foreign spirits and wines would be allowed entry during December and January, and that, if the demand were greater than the supply, the quantity might be increased in order to discourage bootlegging. The government sought to prevent a flood of foreign liquor from swamping the American market to the detriment of domestic producers.

Codes for the distillers and importers already were in effect, and those for the brewers, the rectifiers and blenders and the wine growers were being completed. When congress meets in January one of the first matters to be taken up will be legislation to increase the taxes on liquor and for permanent control of the traffic. To draw up such legislation the house ways and means committee and the senate finance committee were called to meet in joint sessions beginning December 11.

SECRETARY of Agriculture Wallace and Director George Peek of the agricultural adjustment administration, disagreeing radically concerning authority and methods, laid their dispute before President Roosevelt, with the result that the powers of the AAA were sharply curtailed, part of its code work being transferred to the National Recovery administration. Stephen T. Early, one of the President's secretaries, issued this statement:

George Peek

"Following a conference with Secretary Wallace, George Peek, and General Johnson, the President authorized the statement that, for the purpose of co-ordination, all codes under the NRA, including those under negotiations by the AAA, will be turned over to the administrator of the NRA."

Mr. Peek was especially annoyed by press conference statements by Secretary Wallace, which were interpreted among officials as supporting Prof. Rex Tugwell, assistant secretary of agriculture, and the liberal group allied with him. Chief of these liberal associates of Tugwell are Jerome Frank, counsel for AAA, and Frederick Howe, consumers counsel for AAA.

Wallace, in his press conference, questioned the effectiveness of the marketing agreements and codes in the agricultural relief program. He suggested the major necessity in farm relief was strict restriction of crop production. Peek has throughout emphasized marketing agreements rather than crop control methods. Tugwell and other liberals have taken the opposite position, stressing crop control as more important.

LATEST of the farm relief experiments, a $350,000,000 campaign to control the production of corn and hogs by paying federal bounties to the producers, was launched by Secretary Wallace. The money will be raised by processing taxes which the consumer will pay and will go to farmers who sign agreements to reduce their average of corn and production of hogs in 1934.

Benefit payments on corn, under the program, will be at the rate of 30 cents a bushel for each bushel the farmer agrees to withhold from production in 1934. The payment will be based on the average yield of the contracted acreage during the previous five-year period. One-half the payment will be made to the farmer as soon as his contract has been approved, the other half when he has fulfilled the terms of the agreement.

In return for the farmers' agreement to curtail hog production the government will pay $5 a head on 75 per cent of the average number of hogs marketed or to be marketed from litters farrowed by the producers' sows in the last two years.

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT returned from his two weeks in Warm Springs and plunged at once into the work of solving the various financial problems confronting his administration. Most immediate of these was the refinancing of government obligations amounting to about $727,000,000 maturing the middle of the month. This matter was easily and speedily settled when an entire block of $950,000,000 of treasury certificates was sold in one day. The fact that it was heavily oversubscribed was considered in administration circles to be a marked victory for the New Deal economics.

There was no cessation of the controversy over the President's monetary policy and the arguments on both sides grew more bitter, though Mr. Roosevelt himself maintained silence. Financial interests have been considerably annoyed by the fact that the severe federal securities act has checked the movement of capital into legitimate channels, and they were cheered up by Senator Fletcher's statement that President Roosevelt wants the act amended to correct this fault without diminishing the protection of the investing public. Mr. Fletcher, who is chairman of the senate banking committee, said Mr. Roosevelt's attitude had been brought to him by Acting Secretary Morgenthau of the treasury. In this connection he said the President had not asked the banking committee to recommend legislation to curtail the stock exchange operations.

HOW long Budget Director Lewis Douglas will continue to hold his job is a question that interests observers in Washington. He has worried over the expansion of emergency obligations of the government and has warned against any further increase, but almost certainly his warning will not be heeded when congress meets.

Lewis Douglas

Mr. Douglas thinks that the entire budget, including both general and emergency funds, may be brought into balance toward the end of the fiscal year 1935 if no further emergency funds are authorized after the $3,300,000,000 public works fund and the less than a billion left in the RFC fund are used up. He thinks these funds should be sufficient for emergency purposes.

Others in the administration, including the President, have different ideas. Secretary of the Interior Ickes expects to ask for an increase of as much as $1,700,000,000 in the public works fund. The RFC probably will want $1,000,000,000 or more. The new civil works administration will run out of money in the middle of the winter and the President already has expressed the hope that additional funds will be forthcoming from congress. Its allotments have come thus far from both the public works funds and the relief fund of the RFC.

PRESIDENT Roosevelt, addressing the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America, took occasion to condemn severely all those who condone lynchings, and his remarks were interpreted especially as a sharp rebuke for Governor Rolph of California who approved the actions of the mob that hanged two kidnapers and murderers at San Jose.

"This new generation" said Mr. Roosevelt, "is not content with preachings against that vile form of collective murder—lynch law—which has broken out in our midst anew. We know that it is murder and a deliberate and definite disobedience of the commandment, 'thou shalt not kill.' We do not excuse those in high places or in low who condone lynch law."

WHEN Col. Charles A. Lindbergh starts out to do something in the way of aviation, he does it competently, skilfully and neatly. Accompanied and ably assisted by Mrs. Lindbergh, he piloted his big monoplane across the southern Atlantic from Bathurst, Gambia, Africa, to Natal, Brazil, making the 1,875 miles in 10 hours and 10 minutes and landing smoothly in the Natal harbor, where the entire population of the city was gathered to welcome them. Through the long flight Mrs. Lindbergh at the wireless instrument kept in constant communication with Rio de Janeiro.

DEATH came suddenly to Alexander Legge, president of the International Harvester company and one of the country's leading industrialists, in his suburban home near Chicago. He was almost sixty-eight years of age and apparently had been in good health.

Mr. Legge was the first chairman of the federal farm board, under President Hoover, giving up his $100,000 post with the Harvester company in the summer of 1929 to accept the $12,000-a-year government position. For 20 months he devoted himself to farm relief experiments, standing his ground in the face of widespread criticism. Then he resigned and returned to his former place.

By the gift of $400,000 some time prior to his death and of $500,000 in his will, Mr. Legge brought to completion months of work to perfect a philanthropic organization to be known as the Farm Foundation, it was made known by Frank O. Lowden, former governor of Illinois, and chairman of the foundation.

In developing his project, whose funds and activities will be devoted to the improvement of "the social, cultural and economic conditions of rural life," Mr. Lowden disclosed, Mr. Legge enlisted as trustees a group of twenty industrialists, educators, capitalists and farm leaders from all parts of the country.

WITH considerable ceremony and military display the seventh Pan-American conference was opened in Montevideo, Uruguay, to continue probably three weeks. Its deliberations are managed by Enrique E. Buero as secretary-general. He is one of Uruguay's most prominent young diplomats and was summoned from his post as minister to Germany to this duty in the conference.

E. E. Buero

In his speech inaugurating the sessions President Gabriel Terra of Uruguay demanded the "scaling down in all American countries of customs tariffs which President Roosevelt justly termed unsound, fatal and direct originators of world economic disaster." He referred to Mr. Roosevelt's indictment of the Hawley-Smoot tariff measure and retaliatory acts "to which other nations were forced."

Concerning the war in the Gran Chaco between Bolivia and Paraguay, he said, "The noble American juridical tradition cannot remain buried in the swamps of the Chaco."

Postponed from 1932 because of the depression, a gathering in which all 21 nations of the western hemisphere were participating found uppermost in the minds of delegates a mutual search for co-operative methods to improve the economic status of their countries.

Secretary of State Hull heads the delegation from United States, and nine other foreign ministers are participating in the conference.

FOREIGN COMMISSAR MAXIM LITVINOV of Russia, on his way home from his triumphant visit in Washington, stopped over in Rome for a conference with Premier Mussolini, and the correspondents said this resulted in an agreement for Soviet-Fascist collaboration to better the situation in Europe. The well informed thought Mussolini had obtained the support of Russia in his efforts to solve the disarmament problem and that he and Litvinov were in accord in the matter of having Russia and the United States asked to join in the four-power pact. Before Litvinov left Rome he was given a brilliant banquet by the Duce, which was attended by numerous dignitaries.

WITH his experience as a delegate to the disarmament conference at Geneva clearly in mind, Secretary of the Navy Swanson in his annual report urges that the United States abandon leadership in the disarmament movement "by example" and proceed as soon as possible to build its navy up to full treaty strength. He says our concessions in the past have been "dangerous extravagance" and that peace is jeopardized by our weakened condition "because balanced armaments fortify diplomacy."

Secretary Swanson

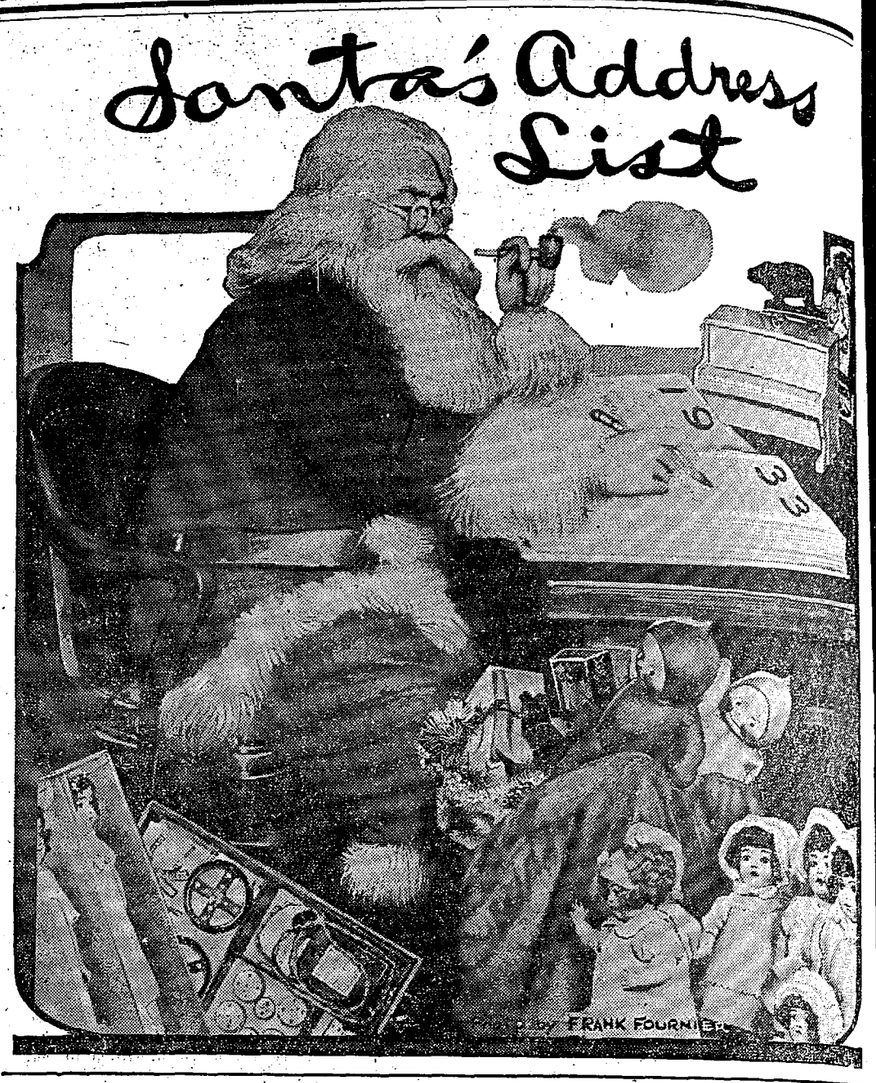

The report showed Japan will have its full treaty strength of 183 vessels with a total tonnage of 775,370 when the treaty expires December 31, 1936, whereas the United States will have only 113 under-age vessels with a total tonnage of 986,520. Under the treaty, the report said, the United States could construct ninety-six more ships with 157,280 tons displacement.

The British empire, according to the secretary, will have 161 vessels with 909,398 tons displacement at the same date, permitting it to build sixty-four ships with a displacement of 197,607 tons.

Japan was highly displeased by Secretary Swanson's approval of the present treaty ratios for navies. The spokesman for the naval office in Tokio declared that Japan is thoroughly dissatisfied with her present allotments under the 5-5-3 ratio and is determined to demand an upward revision of Japan's quota when the naval powers reconvene to consider extension of the Washington and London treaties.

Only a few days before the Japanese cabinet had approved the navy's replenishment program calling for about $245,000,000 for the next three years.

The Christmas Fire

by HELEN GAISFORD

RALPH McQUISTION sat sniffing the warm air of the kitchen, where his mother was basting a turkey and a plum pudding steamed.

He was very proud of his new post as a captain in the volunteer fire department; it smelled like a wonderful Christmas dinner; all in all it was a perfect world, except for just one thing:

The one thing was Georgia, who hadn't spoken to him since their quarrel two months ago. It had been lonely enough before, but it seemed worse now not to have a sweetheart at Christmas time.

"Better get ready for church, son."

"I don't think I'll go."

"Not go! Why, it will be a beautiful service. Everyone will be there And Georgia is going to sing some songs."

"Yes," he answered slowly. "I know."

"If you can't forget her, son, you had better make it up. You can't keep on like this."

"There's nothing I can do," he replied. "She is too proud. If only something would happen."

The church bells rang out. "Only fifteen minutes," said his mother. "You had better come along."

The little church was crowded. Evergreens decorated the aisles, and over the altar there hung a star. The old, old story was told again, of an angel chorus, and shepherds, and the wise men.

Ralph, looking at Georgia, thought she had never seemed so beautiful. And when she sang, the sweet poignancy was almost more than he could bear.

After the service he went up to her. "May I say Merry Christmas, too, Georgia?" he asked. "Your song this morning was wonderful."

"It is kind of you to say so," she answered a little stiffly. There were others waiting to shake hands and exchange greetings, and she had to run away, but Ralph thought he had detected a faint blush.

"Let It Go," She Called. "You Might Be Hurt."

"Come along, Mother," he said at last. "Let's get on home to that turkey."

But at that moment the alarm clanged, and all the men rushed down the street and around the corner to the fire station. Ralph's post was with the chemical engine, and in a few seconds it was out and he and his crew were on their way.

Almost the entire town followed not far behind. A dense pillar of smoke told where to turn, and Ralph was dismayed to find that it was Georgia's house that was in flames.

He worked as he had never worked before. He was in and out of the burning building a dozen times, dragging out furniture, urging his men on, pointing out the best spots to concentrate their efforts.

Georgia stood with the others looking on. "Don't, Ralph!" she pleaded one time when he came out. "Please don't take such risks!"

"Just to have you care is worth more than whatever I can do," he answered. "If there is anything you value especially, I wish you would tell me. I will get it for you if I possibly can."

"No, you mustn't take any more chances."

"Nonsense! Tell me what to get."

"The only picture of my mother is on the dresser. I do wish that could be saved." But when he dashed away she called after him to stop. "Let it go," she called. "You might be hurt." But he was inside the house.

Georgia stood tense, scarcely daring to breathe. "Look out," someone called. "The roof is falling!" There was a shower of sparks and a crash.

But through the door emerged Ralph, with the picture in his hand. "Oh," she said, and suddenly was limp in his arms. "You shouldn't have risked it."

"Georgia," he whispered, as he held her close, "I would risk anything for you. I wanted so to give you a Christmas present, but I didn't dare for fear you would refuse it. But now I can give you this picture, and I know you won't refuse."

"I haven't any gift for you in return," she answered, "but if I say that I am sorry, and—and that I love you, would that do?"

"Would it!" he answered. "What a Christmas!"

The Red Children at Christmastide

By Dr. E. A. BATES

LONG ago before the white man reached the land of the Indians, there came one wintry day to a village of the Iroquois, an old man tired, hungry and cold. At the first bark cabin he asked for food and warmth and was welcomed to the fire in the center of the lodge. He saw the cabin was occupied by a widow with eight children, and having warmed himself, he decided to press onward to the next cabin, where by chance food would be more plentiful; but he was restrained by the children who pleaded with him to share their humble fare.

After the simple meal was over, he noted the children gathering up the bits of meat and fastening them on strings of sinew and collecting the crumbs of cornbread and crunching them into little balls. Then taking the old man by the hand, together they danced around the fire and hastened outdoors to the border of the woods. The boys immediately scrambled up the trees and tied the meat-laden strings to the branches while the little girls placed the corn balls all around the foot of the trees.

The whole group then silently crept away, and soon the little furred and feathered children of the woodland appeared and ate their Christmas dinner. The snowbird offered a cheery song; the gray squirrel wiggled his little ears; and even the old owl winked at the little Indian boys and girls who remembered the Great Spirit's children of the woodland.

Turkey Personification of the Christmas Spirit

BEHOLD King Turkey in a new role —that of personification of the Christmas spirit. A delightful old Indian legend explains why the favorite Christmas bird may make this claim.

Many, many years ago when the world first began (so say the Indians), there was no fire on earth. Only the sun gave agreeable warmth. As winter drew near, the sun stayed hidden longer each day, until finally the feathered flock, shivering with cold, held a consultation and decided that one of them should fly to the sun to bring down a spark of the sun's fire.

The lowly sparrow was the only bird that could make the long flight. But, when he laid the glowing spark on the ground, it grew dimmer and dimmer. No one knew what to do to save it.

But the turkey with his great wings fanned the spark into flame which mounted higher and higher. He continued to fan it until it had warmed all the earth. The heat became so intense that the turkey's head turned fiery red and actually became blistered.

And to this day the turkey's head is a symbol of his devotion to his fellows, which, after all, is the Christmas spirit of good will.

THE GOOD STAR

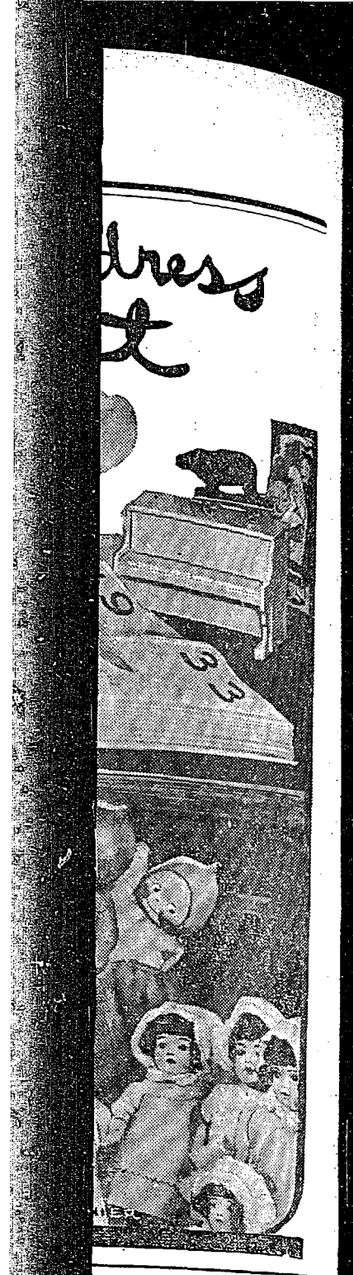

By Hubert Kelley in Kansas City Star

O WISE and Strong, how strange you are,
Who weigh the wind and plumb the star,
To sheathe your minds and make a king
Of such a small and helpless thing.
And you, whose searing steel has won
The favor of the flaming sun,
Who, to the icy moon, have thrown
Your perilous pinnacles of stone,
How strange you do not look aloof
Upon a wretched stable roof!

O Proud Possessors, you who spend
That you may have the more to lend.
Whom life has taught to understand
The wisdom of the grasping hand,
How strange that you should find it sweet
To set your silver at his feet.
By what strange urging, what strange art
Do you abjure the hardened heart?
O World of Men, how wise you are
To count that one uncounted star!

Holly Faces Extermination

The holly tree, the shining green leaves and bright red berries of which have been such an attractive feature of Christmas decorations, is almost world-wide in its distributions. The red-berried type is the one most sought after for the Yuletide, but because of the careless and indiscriminate gathering of the branches faces extermination. Among the 175 varieties of the holly there are types which bear yellow and black berries, which, like the red berries, last over until the following spring. The flex opaca, or American holly, often attains a height of 50 feet, while the Ilex aquifolium, popular in England, is a small shrub seldom attaining more than a few feet in height

Much Weeping And Moaning At Raleigh.

There is much weeping and lamentation going on in Raleige among the office holding crowd, all over the fact that two of the Democratic faithful have lost their jobs. But they needn't weep long, for soon another office will be provided for them somewhere, if not under the state government, then the hundreds of new commissions and boards, et cetera being established by the Roosevelt administration will take care of them.

Thursday the newly revamped State Board of Conservation and Development held its first meeting in Raleigh and the first shot out of the box was to abolish the office of state game warden held by Charles H. England and that of commissioner of inland fisheries held by J. S. Hargett. The state game warden's office was established at the fag end of the McLean administration to give his private secretary, Charles H. England, a permanent job, and England held on through the Gardner fiasco. Hargett is a machine politician from Jones county who had to be taken care of but he is on the outside looking in now.

The 1933 Legislature ordered these two offices abolished but the board is just now meeting and getting around to it.

No definite action was taken on the pending reorganization of the field force, but the board ordered retention of the present four assistant game wardens until its January session. The assistant state game wardens were given additional authority over county wardens serving under them. They may appoint or dismiss county wardens with approval of the director.

Abandonment of the state game farm at Asheboro, Randolph county, and the transfer of its equipment to the Frank Stedman state fish hatchery near Fayetteville and of the Mount Mitchell state game refuge in western North Carolina was authorized.

Discontinuance of the state fish hatchery near Boone, at least during the current biennium, also was authorized.

The board went on record as favoring the creation of a series of public parks throughout the state and requesting the Governor to use his influence toward establishing such reservations "accessible to the sport fishing waters of North Carolina."

Another resolution indorsed the proposal for the construction of a parkway connecting the Shenandoah National park in Virginia and the Great Smoky Mountains National park in North Carolina and Tennessee

Approval was given to plans launched for the establishment of grades and the standardization of seafoods.—Ex.
