Liquor And Women.

To The Observer:

One of the most serious problems confronting our State and nation today is the liquor problem. And so far as I know not a single candidate in our State, for any office of importance has raised a hand or a voice against it. God pity the man who has brain power and who does not dream on the right side of life, and who does not do his part in making the world a better place to live. Whoever sides with the angels of light and clings to the pure and beautiful things of life is greater than Napoleon. Whoever lines up with the hosts of darkness and delivers love and virtue of lust and other vicious passions is nothing more nor less than a walking devil and a breathing hell.

Woe unto the nation that wabes out of the orbit of righteousness and debauches manhood and pure womanhood for the sake of money. Liquid corn is a siren that woos but to destroy; for its excessive use makes it the energy of hell that sets the brain on fire and burns all the beautiful castles of love, hope and happiness into ashes and floods the world with tears. Below the level of decency, lies the plane of drunkard, whose visions and dreams are bounded by the horizon of the still tub. There are no yesterdays to him nor tomorrows. All there is of hope and memory are drowned in the billows of rum, and every reason-phantom that glows in the cut is crushed from the roses that once bloomed on the cheeks of some helpless and innocent women.

We were told by the advocates of repeal, that it would decrease drinking and promote temperance. But to the contrary, it has not only increased drunkenness among men but also among women. The approval of the government tends to give respectability to the liquor traffic in the opinion of some people. The managers of liquor stores in some sections have acknowledged that 20 per cent of their customers are women. It is indeed deplorable to see men debauched and transformed into hogs to jeopardize the safety of the public. But God pity our nation when the wives and mothers become drunkards. The lump is only leavened by the smiling faces and purity of study men and women of character and honor, striving for the betterment of the race. The greatest bulwark of civilization is the beautiful influence to pure virtuous womanhood, and yet how deadly that influence is to human happiness when launched on the side of wrong. Satan himself could not reach the heart of man until the forbidden fruit was offered by a woman. There she stood, the fairest, purest, loveliest thing that God ever made, with a glow of beauty in her face that charmed the very angels, and how easily she led him to his fall.—S. C. Crawley, in Charlotte Observer.

Steiner To Be Keynoter.

Senator Frederick Steiner of Oregon, who delivered the principal address at the North Carolina State Republican Convention in Raleigh in March, has been named to make the keynote address and serve as temporary chairman of the National Republican Convention which meets at Cleveland, Ohio, June 9.

Steiner, at Washington, observed when informed of the committee's action: "That's fine. Now I'll have to get busy and write a speech."

Although opposed to most so-called "new deal" legislation, Steiner voted for the TVA extension, the labor disputes act, the AAA amendments and other measures having administrative sanction. He has actively supported legislation sought by war veterans.

He opposed the work relief bill, the utilities bill, the tax bill and the Guffey coal bill.

Why The Concealment?

"Agricultural legislation, which includes benefit payments or grants to farmers, is a matter of public concern," says the Kansas City Times. There is no fundamentally sound reason for withholding either the names of recipients or the amount of payment which they received. The public is entitled to full and complete information pertaining to the use of public funds.

"If the Department of Agriculture cannot justify a payment of $219,825 to one individual or firm for co-operating with the Government in the corn hog program, $705,488.66 to a New York bank for benefit payment on sugar and $78,638 to a Montana grower for wheat benefits or a loan of $150,000 to a Iowa farmer for storing corn, the sooner it admits its error the better. If these transactions are fully justified and made within the law, there is nothing to fear from publicity.

"There is even more reason for giving publicity to the expenditure of public funds than to re-ceipts of funds into the Treasury from individuals or firms, as is required in connection with income tax and excise tax payments.

"The fear expressed by Secretary Wallace that commercial people and political people would misuse the information is groundless. If so disposed, they could make greater use of estimates or guesses than of actual facts. If absolutely assured of secrecy, officials could misuse funds in a much more damaging way than the people could use information.

"The other excuse, that assembling information would necessarily delay payment of checks, is too weak to be given consideration.

"Benefit payments or grants can be justified only on the assumption that farm incomes are too low to permit an American standard of living, or that the advantages of the protective tariff make it necessary to subsidize agricultural production.

"The payments under consideration are too large to come under the first classification. There may be some question as to the amount of protection which should be granted under the second. Regardless of the basis on which they were granted, the public is entitled to full and complete information on these payments out of public funds."

Out of Death---Beauty.

Over the rough, muddy roads of Cleveland county, Gideon Price carried the mail. For many years through fair weather and foul, through sunshine, snow, sleet and rain he brought the letter, the farm magazine, the newspaper, to country homes.

It was back in 1918 that he got some important mail for himself. His son had trapped the paths of glory into the poppies of Flanders' fields. He was dead and his body lay beneath the drooping skies of France.

But Gideon Price refused to let his son die. He loved that cheery young fellow too much. He had earned him in his arms, he had played games with him. He had taught him the lessons of manhood and of courage. So he couldn't let him die.

Gideon Price has quit carrying the mail over the roads of Cleveland county, though the rough turnpikes are smoother now and many of them are concrete or asphalt boulevard stretching into other counties.

At his home he has planted a tulip garden, one of the most beautiful in America, with more than 75,000 plants. In his retirement, he tends this garden. He has made of it a living memorial to his son who died in France. Out of that death came this beauty for all who would come to see. And in Gideon Price's there is the right of boyish laughter and the prattle of a youngster's tongue as he bends among his tulip rows.—Winston-Sentinel.

Poor Farm Prospects.

We don't particularly like to be pessimistic, but it looks as though agricultural prospects in North Carolina this year would be as poor as they have been in a long, long time.

Extremely inclement weather during January and February delayed the farmers in getting their soil in shape for planting the spring crops. And then, along came torrential rains and floods, still further handicapping them in their work.

Wise indeed is the farmer who takes stock of the situation in which he finds himself and determines that, above all other things, he is going to concentrate his efforts on raising a small crop of good quality, rather than spreading his work over too large an area and raising a large crop of poor quality. If he adheres to that policy, he may still hope to make some profit out of his year's work.—Exchange.

Sales Tax In Sight.

(Pennsylvania Farmer)

In its haste to enact a farm bill, congress did not take time to provide how it should be financed. Nearly a half billion dollars will be needed for this item. Where the money is to come from is a painful subject for law-makers, and not altogether pleasant for taxpayers. The expectation now is that it will come from an excise tax on a wide variety of commodities, mostly farm products.

An excise tax is a sales tax. Changing the name does not change the nature. There are two good points in a sales tax. In the first place, it gets the money—which politicians like. Secondly, it lets the people know when they are paying a tax—which is good for them but not so popular with tax spenders.

However, the process of reasoning whereby it is concluded that putting a sales tax on farm products will help the farmer is a marvel of academic argumentation that must command the astonishment if not the approval of those who confuse their mental gymnastics to logic.

It's about time for 3,829 paragraphs to begin making references to the combination of Leap Year and summer moons.

"Madame President"

On The Way.

A Washington publication said the other day that perhaps because this is Leap Year women throughout the country have been asserting themselves quite frankly in public affairs. Apparently they have more than grown tired of more man's domination. Judging by their various demands for equal rights and their fast growing leagues to fight for those rights, women are no longer satisfied with having chased man out of most of his once exclusive fields. They now demand the "tops" in the trades, the professions and the government.

Lillian Rock, president of the League of Women for President and Other Office, recently expressed the modern woman's view when she declared: "If women are the bearers and the teachers of the race, whatever is to prevent them from becoming the leaders of the race? I see absolutely no reason why the country should always be ruled by only half of the population, and by that I mean men. We will doubtless live to see the day when both halves will rule." Incidentally Miss Rock predicts that a woman will be elected Vice President of the United States by 1940.

And if that comes to pass, she believes that any time after 1950 we may be saving "Madame President" and liking it.

This country today has virtually a woman President behind the scenes in the person of "Miss Eleanor" wife of Franklin D. Not a week passes but what she sticks her nose in some part of statecraft and it has been charged that she is "the power behind the throne" in the White House.

It is well known that the last six months of the administration of Woodrow Wilson, that his wife, Edith Bolling Wilson, was President of the United States. She had absolutely control and not even Joe Tumulty, his private secretary, was allowed in the room where Wilson lay, incapacitated for duty. Only those men supposed to be in charge of affairs at Washington even got to see Mrs. Wilson. She was absolute and it is cause for wonder when we look back on those strange time preceding March 4, 1921, when a new order came into being in Washington how the Republic managed to survive.

Returning to the question of a woman President, we believe it is on the way but we do not believe it is quite as early though, as Miss Rock predicts. European governments have had women rulers so why not America, the women ask. At the present time Holland has a queen and there is only one man (her father) in the way of succession, from preventing England to have another woman sit on the throne.

Plenty of people are alive today who remember the reign of Queen Victoria.

Texas and Wyoming have had women Governors, there are at the present time two women in the United States Senate and in the House of Representatives and in many states women are filling important offices.—Union Republican.

Liquor Problem Not Solved.

Dr. W. L. Poteat, president of the United Dry Forces of the State, says that "the liquor problem is not solved in North Carolina."

"The shame and disaster of the 1935 legislation added to the complication and difficulty of the question," Dr. Poteat declared. "It did for the counties of North Carolina what repeal did for the states of the country, namely, put a variety of laws in the place of one law."

"The ugly and dangerous haste of the liquor legislation of 1935 ought not to be permitted to occur again, and the liquor law enacted then should be repealed."

Stick at the little tasks of life and you will soon find out that somebody else has the big job for himself.

WPA Inquiries

Run Into Snags

Investigations of Politics and Waste Resisted by New Deal.

Administration efforts to prevent a full and fair bi-partisan investigation of WPA waste and political irregularities are called the biggest blunder thus far in the New Deal's election-year activities. Prominent Democrats have expressed disapproval of any suppression of facts. In less than three years more than $7,000,000,000 has been spent for relief by the Federal Government alone. Almost $10,000,000,000 has been allocated for relief purposes.

These huge sums have been disposed of by President Roosevelt and his associates. The work has been directed almost exclusively by New Dealers chosen largely for their loyalty to the party machine. Allotments of money, it is charged, have been governed in many instances by political considerations rather than by the needs of individuals and communities.

Robinson Uses Strategy.

When a Senate committee recently reported favorably a resolution calling for a general investigation of WPA the report was hastily recalled. Senator Joseph T. Robinson, New Deal leader, arranged for the appointment of two additional New Deal Senators to the small committee. Another resolution was drawn up, in milder form. It is not anticipated that the result of an inquiry so constituted will be either impartial or useful. Even writers friendly to the Roosevelt administration criticized the Robinson strategy.

Senator Rush D. Holt, Democrat of West Virginia, has made half a dozen speeches on the floor of the Senate, in one of which he declared: "I charge that WPA in the State of West Virginia was built for a factional political machine."

Charges of misuse of relief funds in Pennsylvania have been made by Senator James J. Davis, of that State. Former Governor Pinchot of Pennsylvania had previously made charges in writing and over the radio. Administration of relief in Michigan was challenged and rumblings of dissent have come from various other states.

He denounced WPA methods in his State as a disgrace. He said that some of the needy were deprived of aid because of the waste of funds by and among politicians. Upon repeated demands for an investigation of his charges, Harry Hopkins, WPA Administrator, sent his own agents to West Virginia. No irregularities were reported by these investigators. Senator Holt challenged the report as a "farce" and a "fraud." He said that sending Hopkins agents to make an investigation of WPA was like sending "Baby Face Nelson" to investigate Dillinger.

Charges of misuse of relief funds in Pennsylvania have been made by Senator James J. Davis, of that State. Former Governor Pinchot of Pennsylvania had previously made charges in writing and over the radio. Administration of relief in Michigan was challenged and rumblings of dissent have come from various other states.

Liquor And Morals.

The ABC liquor stores set up in 17 North Carolina counties during the past eight months have made a splendid contribution toward uplifting moral life in the state. A. H. Graham one of the Democratic candidates for nomination for Governor is reported to have said in a speech at Wilson the other night.

Graham said a state liquor board of three to five members to prescribe rules and regulations for the county ABC boards and a central purchasing commission to buy stocks for the county stores should be established. It is the first time we ever heard of liquor lifting any one up morally and it remains for a Democratic candidate for Governor to bring this great fact to the attention of the Christian people of the state.

We shall not comment on this broad statement of a would-be Governor of our Commonwealth. We will turn him over to the tender mercies of Dr. Pyle, editor of the North Carolina Christian Advocate and when the Greensboro editor gets through with him only a shadow will be left of the Graham candidacy.

Veteran commencement orators are wondering what in (choose your own word) they will say next June when they look into the faces of the ambitious youngsters who gaze expectantly at the speakers as if they expect him to say something.

The democratic machine in North Carolina is getting nervous. Dr. Ralph McDonald has the boys on the run. The Charlotte Observer which has tried to be neutral in the gubernatorial race, has gone to rapping on McDonald. When this staid old sheet begins to get scared it is a sign that there is trouble ahead for the machine gang. The Observer says that the newspaper poll reveals that the school teacher vote of the State is staying away from Dr. Ralph McDonald, and that this is not surprising. Surely The Observer doesn't read the Winston-Salem dailies. Up to last Wednesday the newspaper poll in the Winston-Salem Journal, which covers nine northwestern North Carolina counties, shows that of 16 teachers voting in this poll, 14 voted for McDonald 2 for Sandy Graham, and none for Hoey.

An Attractive Store.

LeGrand's Pharmacy, located in one of the Sanford buildings on the square, presents a very neat and attractive appearance. For the past two weeks painters and carpenters have been busy re painting and remodeling this store. New wall cases, together with new window backs have been installed, and the interior has been repainted in harmonizing effects. This is one of the prettiest and most attractive stores in the county, and Dr. Wilkins, the manager of LeGrand's Pharmacy, would be glad to have the people of Mocksville and Davie county call and look through this modern, up-to-date drug store.

McDonald Here Today.

Dr. R. W. McDonald, candidate for Governor in the democratic primary, will address the voters of Davie county at the court house in Mocksville, on Wednesday, May 6th, at 2 p. m. The public is urged to come out and hear him.

Mocksville Schools Close Next Week.

On next Sunday evening, May 10th, the Mocksville high school commencement sermon will be delivered by Rev. W. H. Dodd, at 8 o'clock. Class night exercises will be given on Tuesday evening, May 12th. The graduating exercises will take place Wednesday evening May 13th. Attorney Frank Hanes, a former Davie county boy, will deliver the annual address. The graduating class is composed of 25 young men and women, which is smaller than the graduating class last year.

The school year just closing has been one of the best in the history of the school. No epidemics have visited the school, and despite the severe winter but few days were lost. Prof. Staton and his able corps of teachers deserve much praise for the fine work done in both the elementary and high schools during the past eight months.

HOW TO TAME A LION TAMER

"Marry Him!" Says Mrs. Clyde Beatty, Whose Hubby Is Terror of Jungle Cats, but Kitten Around House.

By WILLIAM C. UTLEY

GRRLS, what would you do if you woke up one of these spring mornings and discovered that you were in love with a lion tamer? With a guy who stares the King of Beasts right in the eye and makes him sit sulking in a corner like a disciplined schoolboy? Who wrestles hand-to-hand with a man-eating tiger and wins the decision? Who walks into a cage with thirty or forty assorted jungle cats of both varieties twice a day and makes them do his bidding? Who even keeps a lion around the house to take care of the scraps from the dining table?

Don't laugh. It might happen to YOU. This is spring. Spring is the open season for romance. And spring is the season for the opening of the circus.

It happened to a little Russian-American girl just about three years ago. She fell in love with a lion tamer, a lion tamer who does all those unbelievable things we were just talking about. And what did she do? She married him.

Follows Hubby's Footsteps. She married Clyde Beatty, the little, curly-headed fellow who is generally considered the greatest animal trainer of all time.

For a couple of years she peeled potatoes in their home at Rochester, Ind., where the circus spends the winter, while Clyde's lion-around-the-house sat at her feet and roared for more table scraps. But like all good wives, Harriet knew that she must keep herself interested in the things that appealed to her husband. And she did—with a vengeance. She became a lion tamer herself and now appears every day in the same circus with her husband. She is today the only trainer in the world who "works" a lion, a tiger and an elephant in the same cage at the same time.

The story of this remarkable pair is one of those romantic dramas under the big top that endow the circus with much of the glamor it still holds for millions, young and old, even in this fast-moving age.

The story really begins about sixteen years ago in Chillicothe, Ohio. There was a circus playing in Chillicothe, and its fanfare drew the attention of a strapping youth of fifteen in the town of Bainbridge, a few miles away. It was a big day for the boy. It was also a big day for the circus, although that was not proven for quite a few years.

Clyde Beatty never went back to Bainbridge. He got a job as a cage-boy for the polar bear act. He was pretty small, but there was something in his eye, and they took him.

Tames Dame Fortune. Two years later Clyde was working his own act—not with polar bears, but with the great cats who would kill a man with a single bite and do it willingly.

Over the years Clyde and his cats were to reach the heights—heights from which they have not yet descended. In rapid succession came top billing in the Big Show, moving pictures and, finally, ownership interest in one of the major circuses. Clyde is now part owner of the Cole Brothers circus, in which he and Mrs. Beatty perform.

To catch up Mrs. Beatty's part of the story now: She was born in Chicago of Russian parents not too many years ago. Her name was something you have to guess in Russian but in English it became just plain Harriet Evans. In 1930 the circus was in town and advertised for girls to sell candy. Harriet needed a job, and she joined up with the show. Like Beatty she never left it.

Harriet is a tiny wisp of a thing, with deep-set, serious eyes betrayed by a smile that curls at the corners. Her soft, delicate, blonde beauty charms all who meet her. It was too good for a candy girl. Combined with her natural flair for dancing inherited from Russian ancestors, it got her into the circus ballet.

Harriet Gets Up in World. From the ballet it wasn't much of a jump—figuratively speaking—to the flying trapeze, and Harriet accomplished it, quaintly enough, with the greatest of ease.

And then she fell. No, not from the trapeze (although she did that, too, once). She fell for the dapper little man who looked the bold, bad lions in the eye and made them wilt.

Mr. Beatty looked the petite aerial artist in the eye—and HE wilted. The little giant whose leer could turn a jungle roar into petulant whimper just rolled over on his back and purred like a kitten. The daredevil with nerves of steel became putty in the hands of a woman—THE woman.

And now, girls, if your best boy friend happens to be a bookkeeper, a farmer, a clerk, a lawyer, a truck driver, a doctor or even a newspaper man, here is your chance to find out what a thrill it is to be wooed by the world's most courageous lion tamer. You have Harriet Beatty's word for it: First-hand.

Imagine the Thrills, Girls!

"What?" Mrs. Beatty was asked, "is it like to be wooed by a lion tamer?"

"Oo—oo—oo!" She girlishly giggled. "It ees very sweet!"

"How does a fearless, dominating ride around the ring the best of friends. So adept a trainer is she, she has never yet had a "close call" in the cage.

Such luck has not fallen to the lot of her husband. Clyde works as many as 43 assorted lions and tigers in the same cage at once. He makes them perch upon stools and assume all kinds of positions and formations. Menell, a new cat with the act this year, sits on his haunches and waves his paws around in the air like a prize fighter entering the ring. A tiger rolls over and over and then chases his tail at Clyde's command. With such goings-on amid a horde of wild beasts, it is not an infrequent happening for one or two of the cats to rebel.

Clyde's closest shave came in winter quarters when he was rehearsing his act preparatory to opening the 1932 season. Samson, one of the older and larger lions, attacked him and put him in the hospital, hovering between life and death for sixteen weeks. Had not a tiger then attacked the lion and diverted its attention, Clyde must have been a goner.

Lion Kills Cage Boy.

Samson, incidentally, is one beast you would not like to be meeting some night down a dark alley. The writer personally saw him sink his teeth into the shoulder of another trainer, Allen King, one night, and King, too, would be a dead man today if a tiger had not come to his rescue. (It must not be supposed that the tiger in either case was trying to save the trainer's life—he was merely after a nice, juicy bite of lion meat on the hoof). Last winter Samson succeeded in killing a cage boy who carelessly left the "chute" door open while working.

The two cats have a natural hatred for each other, and when this hatred works up to a certain pitch a fight sometimes results in the cage, with disastrous results. In Muskegon, Michigan, last season a fight almost broke up the show and resulted in the death of a cat or two. Across the state in Bay City the season before a rumble in the cage caused a pistol in Beatty's holster to discharge, wounding him severely in the leg. He went on with the act, however, and it was not until some time later that the slug was removed by a doctor. He loads his gun with nothing but blanks now.

Clyde Beatty has never seen an African jungle, but then Edgar Rice Burroughs wrote the whole "Tarzan" series of savage jungle lore and he hasn't seen one either. Clyde buys his cats from zoos and animal dealers. He looks for lions and tigers with spirit, cats who will fight back when he encourages them. That's one of the reasons that his every appearance in the cage is a nearly-mortal ordeal, one that leaves him sopping wet with perspiration and with nerves so unstrung that he will talk to no one, even his wife, for 20 minutes after the act.

Prefers Cats to Cameras.

Even so, Clyde says he is more afraid of Hollywood than his cage of cats. He has made three pictures, "The Big Game," "The Lost Jungle" and "Darkest Africa." The latter is a thriller serial which he completed this winter, and it's Hollywood at its damnest. It's full of Bat Men, wild hairbreadth escapes, volcanic eruptions and heroic feats.

In making the picture, Clyde was badly bruised by some of the Bat Men, did not succeed in effecting a couple of the hairbreadth escapes, was rather painfully blown up in one of the synthetic volcanoes and had to rest up for a week after performing the final heroic feat.

The last named incident occurred when the director casually asked Clyde if he would mind "rassling" a tiger bare-handed, on the plea that it would be "sure-fire picture stuff." Clyde was finally talked into it, but only on condition that the match take place after the rest of the picture was finished, so there would still be a picture, even if there was not any more Beatty.

The match was long and furious and Clyde got pushed around plenty before winning the deciding fall. "Pretty good," conceded the director, "pretty good. Now let's try it just once more with a little more of the old pep!"

Clyde's reply has been deleted so that this newspaper can be sent through the United States mails.

Oo—oo—oo! It ees not very sweet!

Lesson for May 10

EFFECTUAL PRAYER

LESSON TEXT—Luke 18:1-14. GOLDEN TEXT—God be merciful to a sinner.—Luke 18:13. PRIMARY TOPIC—How Two Men Prayed.

JUNIOR TOPIC—When Prayer Changes Things. INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—How Should I Pray? YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—How Shall We Pray Effectively?

From first to last the books of the Bible teem with the language and spirit of prayer. Prayers of every type are found in the Old Testament—personal confession and petition, intercession, and especially praise to Jehovah voiced in private and public prayers. The present lesson offers definite instruction by a great Teacher.

I. "Men Ought Always to Pray" (v. 1).

Prayer is necessary to spiritual life. What breathing is to the physical body prayer is to the spiritual existence. Men ought to pray under every variety of circumstance; in time of sorrow and burden, for strength to endure; in time of joy and success, for grace to behave aright.

Prayer ought to be persistent even when the answer is not immediately recognized. "All men pray at times," we are told. To the Christian alone belongs the faith-filled and persistent prayer. God hears and answers prayer, even when we do not understand the mysteries of delay.

II. The Urgent Prayer of a Widow (vv. 2-8).

The picture here is of a helpless widow who was being cheated out of her property rights, coming to a godless judge for redress. Her only means of getting help was persistently to declare the justice of her claim. He complied with her urgent request, not because he feared God or man, but to get rid of her. The point here is not that God is like this unjust judge, that he can be teased into compliance, but rather the teaching is by contrast. If through persistence the judge yields, how much surer is the help of a merciful God for the elect who cry unto him day and night. The believer's prayer is to a covenant-keeping God. This is why the truth concerning the coming of Christ is of such meaning. The church should pray for the fulfillment of God's promise, and not be disheartened and discouraged, as are some (II Pet. 3:4). Though many may despair, we should be assured that genuine faith will abide and that the divine promise concerning the coming of Christ will be fulfilled.

III. The Prayer of the Proud Pharisee (vv. 9-12).

1. He took a striking attitude (v. 11). The Jewish custom was to stand while praying, but the word "stood" implies the assumption of ostentation. He was self-righteous and trusted in himself.

2. He prayed with himself (vv. 11, 12). He was merely soliloquizing, pretending to thank God, while really complimenting himself. He congratulated himself upon his morality (v. 11). He claimed to thank God that he was not as other men: extortioners, adulterers, unjust, or even as the publican standing afar off. One who has been kept from the grosser sins ought to thank God, but should not set himself above his fellow men, as though the virtues were his own. He congratulated himself for his religious merit (v. 12). He fasted twice a week and gave tithes of all he possessed. He thus informed God that he did even more than was required.

IV. The Prayer of the Humble Publican (v. 13).

How great the contrast in the prayer and spirit of the publican! He did not stand with ostentation, but for very shame could not so much as lift up his face to heaven, but smote upon his breast, a sign of anguish and despair, and cried "God be merciful to me a sinner." That this heart-cry is indeed the heart of the lesson is indicated from the fact that it is cited as the golden text.

V. Christ's Testimony (v. 14). Christ makes it unmistakably evident that the attitude and petition of the publican meets with his favor. Pharisees of every age, for their pride and self-righteousness are rejected of God. The spirit of the publican expressing itself in the prayer of a penitent, will today meet with the commendation, "This man went down to his house justified."

The believer who weighs thoughtfully the meaning of this lesson will find much encouragement to prayer. He must be justified, knowing his sins forgiven in answer to penitential prayer. He must pray in spite of a natural impulse to faint, to neglect the practice of prayer; he ought always to pray, and not faint.

A Harsh Word

To be silent, to suffer, to pray when we cannot act, is acceptable to God. A disappointment, a contradiction, a harsh word received and endured in his presence, is worth more than a long prayer.—Fenelon.

Ennobling Our Work

Our daily life should be sanctified by doing common things in a religious way. There is no action so slight or so humble but it might be done to a great purpose or ennobled thereby.—G. MacDonald.

Berlin reports a great Hitler forty-seventh birthday celebration including a fine display of military power—airplanes, war tanks, fighting men, apparently eager for a fight. They were young and could not remember the last war.

Particularly interesting were two lines in the song sung by storm troopers:

"Today we own Germany,
And tomorrow the whole world."

The day after Hitler celebrated his forty-seventh birthday celebration including a fine display of military power—airplanes, war tanks, fighting men, apparently eager for a fight. They were young and could not remember the last war.

England, doing well in a business way, with more than $2,000,000,000 worth of Bank of England notes circulating among tradesmen, is collecting gold and depleting the French reserves. While England tries to keep down the price of her "no-gold" pound, France is afraid she will not be able to keep up the value of her gold franc, already devalued by 80 per cent of its 1914 value. What becomes of the "magic in gold"? Our dear old dollar is worth only 50 cents, and only dealers in exchange know it.

Doctor Benedict, of Carnegie laboratories, finds that the adult elephant's heart beats from 22 to 30 times a minute, less than half the human heartbeat, and the elephant heartbeat is nine strokes faster when the animal is lying down. Man's heart beats more rapidly while he stands—because then it must raise blood the full height of the body. Old poets, with tired hearts, should do their writing lying down—the blood flows horizontally with little heart effort.

England is pleased; Sir Robert Hadfield, who makes tough steel, announces a shell for British naval guns that can pass unhurt through armor plate twelve inches thick and explode on the other side. "One shell of this kind fired in the region of the magazine would probably cause destruction of a modern battleship." England is manufacturing the shells rapidly; others are manufacturing airplane bombs that might make old-fashioned naval guns and shells useless.

In Miami a lady, first name Lois, and married, has husky triplet babies. Two gentlemen, the official husband and one other, demand custody of the triplets, each calling himself the real father. The alleged "father" who is not the husband would submit to any blood test, his lawyer says. How would King Solomon decide that?

Clarence Darrow, one of the country's most convincing lawyers, says on his seventy-ninth birthday: "I say that religion is the belief in future life and to God. I don't believe in either."

The hophead beside the track, watching the express train go by, might say, reasonably enough: "I do not believe in such a thing as a locomotive engineer."

Moscow has returned to the Japanese government in Manchukuo, with full military honors, the bodies of three Japanese killed in a fight with Soviet guards. The military honors will not console the widows, and, repeated often enough, such incidents lead to war.

Europe envies our fortunate country, which gives only paper dollars and inflation paper bonds to its citizens but has, buried in the ground, the biggest lump of gold on earth.

A wonderful thing is micro-chemistry. It tells scientists that off the coast of Greenland sea water contains more gold than in New York harbor; that one village in Switzerland has less gold than another because, in the first the dewdrops contain more iodine.

Stiewer to Be Keynote for Republicans—Flood Control
Bill Passes Senate—Battle Over New Tax Bill in House.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

WHEN the Republicans gather in national convention at Cleveland next June their keynote for the Presidential campaign will be sounded by Frederick Stiewer, the eloquent and handsome United States senator from Oregon. He was selected to be temporary chairman of the convention by unanimous vote of the arrangements committee of the national committee after due consideration had been given the names of several other prominent Republicans.

Senator Stiewer

Observers held that the motive in picking Stiewer was a desire of the party leaders to give the convention a western atmosphere at the start, with an especial eye to agriculture. The senator has been actively identified with wheat growing and his home town, Portland, is a center of the northwestern battleground of the November elections. His colleague is Senator Charles L. McNary, one of the authors of the old McNary-Haugen agriculture bill and by many regarded as a possible dark horse in the Presidential nomination race. Governor Landon said he was glad to hear Stiewer had been chosen, and it was believed Senator Borah also approved, for in many ways Stiewer has proved himself liberal, and at the same time has upheld the Constitution and the American form of government.

He has opposed most of the New Deal measures, but has not been uncompromising, as he voted for such acts as the TVA extension, the labor disputes act, and the AAA amendments. He has been active in soldier legislation, including the bonus. He opposed the work relief bill, the utilities bill, the tax bill and the Guffey coal bill. Congressman Bertrand Snell of New York, minority leader in the house, was selected to be permanent chairman of the convention, a position he held in the convention of 1932.

DISREGARDING warnings by Senator Vandenberg of Michigan against too hasty action, the senate passed a bill introduced by Senator Overton of Louisiana authorizing the expenditure of $272,000,000 for flood control work on the lower Mississippi river and its tributaries. There was no record vote. The bill has no relation to the omnibus flood control measure now pending, which may reach a billion. The sum named in the senate bill is authorized merely to be appropriated and will have to be put in a deficiency appropriation bill. Senator Overton declared it was justified by emergency conditions.

In addition to the 272 million dollars there is authorized an appropriation of 15 millions to be allocated by the secretary of war and used in rescue work or repair and maintenance of flood control works.

FEDERAL JUDGE HALSTED L. RITTER of Florida was found guilty on impeachment charges by the senate and removed from office, being the fourth federal jurist to be ousted in this manner. On each of the first six articles of impeachment a majority of senators voted for his acquittal; but on the seventh article, which was a generalized summary of the charges against him, he was convicted by a vote of 56 to 28.

An order declaring Ritter should be "forever disqualified from holding any office of honor, trust or profit under the United States" was defeated, 76 to 0.

The senate's verdict in the twelfth impeachment case brought before it as a high court of impeachment since foundation of the American republic amounted to a decision that Judge Ritter had violated the Constitutional requirements of good behavior in office. It carried no punishment other than automatic removal from the bench.

THE administration's bill to levy about 800 million dollars in new taxes yearly was introduced in the house by the ways and means committee, and a fierce battle started immediately. The Republican minority of the committee issued a report which stated that the proposed tax law was "unsound in principle, will undermine business stability, is another step toward regimentation of all business, and is not designed to raise revenue but admittedly is another New Deal experiment."

Conservative Democrats joined with the Republicans in this attack against the bill, but the administration leaders were confident the measure would pass before May 1.

Complete revision of the corporation tax system is the main objective of the bill. It levies a graduated tax on corporation income, based on percentage of earnings withheld from distribution to stockholders in the form of dividends.

The majority report asserted that revenue would rise about $308,000,000 the first year, but admitted that over a three-year period revenue would fall $334,000,000 short of the President's budget-balancing program. It was added that the deficit could be acted on "more intelligently" next session.

SENATOR KENNETH MCKELLAR of Tennessee made an attempt to reduce by $225,000 the appropriation for the federal bureau of investigation, otherwise J. Edgar Hoover's G-men, and failed ignominiously. Only McKellar and one other senator were in the affirmative on a viva voce vote, and in the brief but lively debate several Democrats, including Majority Leader Joe Robinson, joined Senator Vandenberg in denouncing the proposed reduction. The Michigan man's remarks were caustic. Said he:

"I will go as far as the senator from Tennessee in all matters of economy, but it seems to me that this is a peculiar place to start economizing. The bureau says it needs 175 more men. If the senator wants to save 175 men, I will join him in taking that number from the 13,235 employed by Doctor Tugwell's resettlement administration. I will join him in abolishing 175 of the 43,841 jobs under Mr. Hopkins. I will join him in removing that number from the 13,548 jobs under the HOLC, or the 2,422 jobs under the long interred NRA."

SEVEN persons were indicted by a federal grand jury in St. Paul, Minn., for the kidnaping of William Hamm, Jr., brewer, in June, 1933. Some of the accused are already in prison. Only one, Alvin Karpis, public enemy No. 1, is still at large, and the Department of Justice in Washington has offered a reward of $5,000 for information leading to his apprehension.

OCCUPATION of Addis Ababa and all of Ethiopia was the price demanded by Italy for an armistice in East Africa, when the council of the League of Nations met again in Geneva. Baron Pompeo Aloisi presented the ultimatum on behalf of Dictator Mussolini. Wolde Mariam, representing Ethiopia, countered with a request that the league invoke all penalties against Italy under article 16 of the covenant, these including military sanctions.

Baron Aloisi

As well as the economic penalties which the league has been trying to enforce, the British and French delegates explained the stand of their respective governments in the embargo. The league was helpless, and having received the discouraging report of the conciliation committee, was compelled to confess it could not find means of attaining peace. France will not consent to the imposition of military sanctions, and Great Britain naturally will not undertake to enforce them by herself. It appeared the poor Ethiopians were to be abandoned to their fate, meaning the extinction of their empire and their exploitation by Italy.

Anthony Eden in his address to the council warned France that she might expect from Great Britain no further support against aggression by Germany than France had given against Italy. From the north, south and west the Italian armies were advancing on Addis Ababa, and the panic stricken civilian inhabitants of the capital were fleeing from the city. Foreigners sought shelter in the bomb-proof British legation. The mayor issued all the arms available and the government called on all able men to make a last stand for liberty, saying "it is better to die than to be enslaved."

Latest dispatches told the Ethiopians were blasting the road between Dessale and Addis Ababa, and that the advance of some of the Italian columns had been halted by strong attacks. The emperor was afield with his troops and turned the government at the capital over to Crown Prince Asfa Wosan.

THAT old gold mine at Moose River, Nova Scotia, provided an epic tale of unselfish and heroic human endeavor that will be told for many a year. For ten days more than a hundred experienced miners strove unceasingly to rescue three men who had been trapped by the fall of dirt and rocks in the 140-foot level of the abandoned mine they were inspecting. Machinery and other equipment were brought from far away. A diamond drill was driven through and through this small opening, communication was established and food was dropped down but already one of the three was dead of hunger and exhaustion. Finally the desperate efforts of the rescuers were successful and the two survivors were brought safely to the surface, together with the body of the dead man. Those saved were Dr. D. E. Robertson, famous and beloved surgeon of Toronto, and C. A. Scadding. The one who did not live was Herman Magill, also of Toronto.

SECRETARY OF LABOR PERKINS reported that employment in manufacturing and nonmanufacturing industries during March showed a gain of 250,000. One division of the steel industry, she reported, had increased its employment above the 1929 level. Pay rolls in the industries surveyed by the Labor department were $10,000,000 above February and $20,000,000 over a year ago.

The employment index in the wire making division of the steel industry, she said, now stands at 143, compared with 124.2 in 1929. At the same time she pointed out that four and a half million young people have come on the labor market since 1929 and that employment would have to rise to 125 per cent of the "normal" level to absorb these newcomers.

Sixty-six of the manufacturing industries reported gains, she said, and 11 of the 16 nonmanufacturing industries showed improvement in employment.

GOV. ED. C. JOHNSON of Colorado is determined to keep "cheap labor" out of his state and has taken steps to stop the invaders at the boundary lines by means of a military patrol of the National Guard. Col. Neil W. Kimball, adjutant general, flew over western Oklahoma on a scouting expedition following reports workers were gathering for a concentrated "border run."

Guard officers said workers were camped across the state line in Oklahoma. Reports that indigents were evading the patrol along the New Mexico line by turning eastward, sent patrol units hurrying to the Kansas boundary.

ANOTHER post-war treaty has gone sooty. President Kemal Ataturk of Turkey and his cabinet decided that the Dardanelles must be demilitarized, despite the Lusanne pact, and Turkish troops were promptly moved into the zone along the 75-mile long strait that connects the Sea of Marmora and the Aegean sea. It is believed Kemal will soon rebuild the fortifications in the zone which the allies failed to capture during the World War.

The Turkish dictator didn't surprise anyone by his action, for he asked permission of the League of Nations some time ago to rearm the Dardanelles. No formal reply had been made, but the British government rather favored giving consent, and the Soviet union openly approves Turkey's move. Italy was displeased, and there was considerable excitement in the Balkan states, especially Bulgaria which borders on European Turkey. The Bulgarians renewed their demand for a corridor giving them a direct route to the Aegean sea.

Probably Kemal's action will not be severely condemned by anyone, for most of the European nations are preparing for war with feverish haste. Austria's army, small but well equipped, held a spring parade in Vienna, and immediately the nations of the little entente displayed their anger at this show of military force and their military attaches in the Austrian capital were ordered not to occupy the places reserved for them among the reviewing officials. Rumania has increased its military budget to $38,000,000 and created a special fund of $20,000,000 for the development of aviation. Hungary is clamoring for revision of the Trianon treaty and recovery of the territory it lost to the little entente.

LOUIS MCHENNY HOWE, secretary to President Roosevelt and for many years his close friend and adviser, died in the Naval hospital at Washington after an illness of more than a year. Mr. Howe was known in the capital as "the President maker," for it was largely due to his efforts that Mr. Roosevelt reached the White House. For twenty-five years, from the day when Mr. Roosevelt and he first met in Albany, he had devoted himself to forwarding his friend's political fortunes. During the Chicago convention and the ensuing campaign his planning and his advice were credited largely with the results attained.

DISPATCHES from Chengtu, China, tell a terrible story of the famine and drought in Szechuen province, once one of the most fertile regions in the country. It is said to be the worst famine in the history of China, the deaths numbering many thousands and fully 30,000,000 persons being in distress. Suicides and "mercy slayings" are everyday incidents. Officials said the situation primarily was a result of Communist incursions during the last two years in which the reds overran and pillaged the land.

WHAT American newspaper publishers think of the actions of the Black lobby committee was expressed forcibly and unequivocally in resolutions adopted by their national association at its annual meeting in New York. The committee was accused of having violated the first, fourth and fifth amendments to the Constitution by its seizures of private communications, and the publishers recommended that all victims of the committee's acts seek civil damages and demand the "prosecution of all involved in the odious affair under the criminal statutes of the United States."

NATIONAL PRESS BLDG., WASHINGTON, D. C.

Washington.—I suggested in these columns a year or more ago that the campaign of 1936 would bring forth some of the most amazing oddities in political alignments that this country had ever known. It was apparent, even during the battle for ballots in 1932, that a gigantic shake-up in the voting alignment of citizens was in the making. These things are now being demonstrated and more proof of the changing times seems just around the corner.

We all have seen how such outstanding figures as former Gov. Alfred E. Smith of New York, the Democratic Presidential nominee in 1928, have boldly flouted President Roosevelt and his New Deal theories and we have witnessed such vitriolic outbursts as those by former Senator James A. Reed, that old-line Missouri Democrat, and we have watched with interest the hauling and filling by Jeffersonian Democrats who find New Deal fantasies to be a bitter pill to swallow. Later, there has come another most interesting situation respecting partisan alignment.

Although the action received much less attention than I believe it deserves, the determination of the Virginia Republicans in their recent convention at Roanoke to refrain from placing a Republican candidate in the field against Senator Carter Glass constitutes, to my mind, one of the most extraordinary twists ever to take place under our two party system. That convention, acting utterly without precedent, took the position that it was better to leave the field clear for the election of the veteran senator than to precipitate a political battle by naming a Republican candidate.

The reason for the action of the Virginia Republicans is quite clear in one way. They felt that Carter Glass, although a life-long Democrat who has carried on his share of bombardment of Republican principles and policies, could do the country more good from their standpoint than could be attained by placing a Republican candidate against him without chance of success. To state this premise in another way: Carter Glass does not swallow the New Deal as a whole and when he finds objectionable features in the Roosevelt program, he is independent enough and has the strength of character to voice his feelings. Doing this as a member of the majority party in the senate necessarily has more weight than all of the criticism of the New Deal that could be voiced by a Republican—if one could be elected in Virginia—and the Virginia convention chose a course which it believed would best serve the nation as a whole.

But it is the circumstance of a party convention refusing to engage in battle that interests me most. Under such circumstances, the old idea of party loyalty becomes not only illogical but ridiculous. Instead of a call to battle, we see what amounts to a call for support of a theoretical opponent. Of course, in the opinion of many, Carter Glass is the outstanding exponent of conservative thought in the Democratic party and if he speaks for conservative thought in the Democratic party, he is almost speaking for conservative thought in the Republican party. It is easy to see, therefore, why the Virginia Republicans adopted the course they did but where does that leave party loyalty? What does it mean as to the future alignment of political thought?

The course followed by the Virginia Republicans is not more strange than the action of President Roosevelt himself. Senator Hiram Johnson of California, and Senator George Norris of Nebraska, with almost boyish enthusiasm, Senator Johnson and Senator Norris have not been regarded as regular Republicans but they have been flying the Republican banner for a good many years. Yet, the President verbally pats them on the back and offers his blessing.

During the same period, we have watched Mr. Roosevelt playing touch-and-go with the La Follettes in Wisconsin. Of course, the La Follettes catalogue themselves as Progressives but they never have had a great deal in common with old-line Democrats. Likewise, in the senate if one is to believe gossip frequently bandied about, Senator McNary of Oregon, the titular Republican leader, has been only half-heartedly fighting the New Deal. In fact, some of Senator McNary's own colleagues claim that he has really given aid and comfort to their political enemies.

In the meantime, one can wander around the halls of congress and hear private observations from men who were supposed to be stalwart partisans and yet what their course ought to be. One of them remarked confidently to me that he believed he would have to consult a clairvoyant before he could say whether he was going to support the New Deal or oppose it or try to straddle the fence. Of course, his remark was in a humorous vein but it epitomized the thought and I imagine the worry of a very great many senators at this time.

So, we have a picture sketched ahead of the actual casting of ballots in which party lines are asunder for countless hundreds, more or less important party functionaries agree that the development of New Deal principles and policies is the leadership of President Roosevelt. There will be many who are doubtful as to their course when they realign themselves with the New Deal because they were originally Democrats and there will be many who again follow the Republican line down the stretch. But it seems that three years of Roosevelt's independent voting strategy in congress has established a greater respect for a century of partisan politics than had resulted from a century of the same thing. The situation must be then as indicating that hereafter who stick definitely in party lines will continue to stand isolated and they have political aspirations and ambitions or because economic conditions in their communities are being altered by the party with which they have aligned themselves. Regardless of it seems to me, citizens in congress will vote in increasing numbers for a man instead of the party.

At last, after almost two years of promotion work, President Roosevelt has been named to the post of chief executive of the United States.

'Quoddy Dream' Dropped
tides of Passamaquoddy bay is now and construction of a glassed canal across Florida. The 'Quoddy' project, designed to produce electric power quantities never before turned out, to cost $40,000,000. The great plan excavating a slit across the base of the state of Florida to let ships go from the Atlantic to the Gulf without going around the toe of the peninsula to cost $150,000,000.

Only a small amount, that is, a sum compared to other New Deal expenditures, had been wasted on the ship canal plans before it was into the limbo of forgotten things, something like $10,000,000 already been used in the attempt to charter moon work through the media of the 'Quoddy' bay. Both projects can be charged up to political experiments and probably the latter will be better off to take the road and avoid the use of further money.

The President's plans suggested through with his plans suggested these two projects until he ran into vicious opposition in congress. Many representatives and senators realized that they were going to lose the names 'Quoddy' bay and Florida canal hurried at them through the approval by including additional funds for these projects in the relief appropriations. I don't know what the result is to become of the homes, the city, erected for workers near the 'Quoddy' bay project. Photographs of this village indicate it to be a community of which any resident might be proud. It was constructed to serve the workers on the 'Quoddy' bay project. They still have the comfortable place in which to live because the government still owns the homes but what to become of those people and what disposition is to be made of the property is something else again.

Most engineers have contended that it was impossible to place in the bay equipment that could function at the same time producing electric current at a rate that would bring a return on the tremendous investment necessary, far more than that, no one yet has been able to show where so much electric energy could be marketed. The fact is sparsely settled, while a material production is small. While it is contended that limitless power would be brought industries into that section, indications were, even after some work started, for only a small amount in the number of factories and other users of energy.

The 'Quoddy' power idea probably was the most fascinating and romantic of anything proposed by the New Deal for the proposed Florida ship canal. It held possibilities for jobs. Like the possibilities for jobs whose opinion herefore have been sound remain unconvinced that the power plan or the canal for a cut across Florida ever could pay the government for money spent on it.

There was a dense summer fog and the officer on the bridge was becoming more and more exasperated. As he leaned over the side of the bridge trying to pierce the gloom he saw a hazy figure leaning on a rail a few yards from his ship. He almost choked. "What do you think you're doing with your blinking ship?" he roared. "Don't you know the rules of the sea?"

Jim and the others did draw back. It would not do to get too close to those clicking teeth, those blazing eyes. "Why, he's hurt! Look at that leg! Here, Tip..." Again Jim tried to get near but a shrill raving and the flashing of those strong, white teeth set him again in retreat.

"Mad, I tell you!" "Here, Tip! Let's see."—Ezra Adams trying, now, but the dog drove him back, too.

Advice, warnings, speculation; confusion. And then Nan Downer pushed through the circle.

"What's wrong?... Oh! Tip! Why, Tip..." The tall dropped heavily, the dirt smeared tongue lolled; the dog panted and whined. The girl dropped to her knees beside him and he put his nose in her lap. The eyes closed and Tip drew a quivering sigh. He had come to Nan at last.

Now he could be touched; now the hurt could be examined.

"Broken!" gasped Ezra. "And... Good Lord, sergeant, this dog's been shot!"

The words echoed from a dozen throats. "Shot!"

"He was with Kerry!" Nan cried. "Ezra! Where is Kerry? Where is..."

"That," snapped the policeman, "is what we've got to find out! Come on, you trappers! Look! You can see every step he took in this road!"

Mid-afternoon, now, and his head rolled drunkenly as Young fought off that cloud of darkness. He could not hold it much longer. The cabin was beyond his range of vision.

He had one cartridge left. He remembered that. For weeks, it seemed, his intermittent firing had kept West within that cabin. He had only one more shot to fire, and he could not see the head of his sight. That was all blurred, like other matters; pain and sickness and his manner of getting here.

His face drooped heavily against the stock. He was so weary. He wanted to sleep... just a moment... just a second... One little wink of respite...

And then he knew that for ever so long voices had been in his ears. Voices, saying over and over: "Here he went!" Or was it just once that the words had been said? Just once? "Here he went!" It must have been Jim Hinkle saying that. Jim's voice, saying it just now, just once! "Here he went!"

And Jim was standing there in the road, bent over, with a group around him. And Nan with her hand on Jim's shoulder, and the sound of glass breaking...

Glass breaking! Window glass breaking before the thrust of a rifle barrel through the pane; tinkling as it spilled over the sill. And a man with his shoulder slammed tight against that rifle, and window casing sighting that rifle, and

Tod West, that, taking his final toll. One, two, three... They'd drop there in the road before the crash of his repeating weapon. One, two, three... West in sight, exposed to Young!

Oh, how well Kerry could see now. He could see the head of his front sight, could see it flash true against that bulky breast and the recoil did not hurt, that time. He did not even think of it... He saw that other rifle barrel fly upward, saw Tod West spin about, back to the window... Saw him stand there a moment and then, in the terrible silence, saw him disappear with the crash which loosed torrents of grief and words and sounds of running feet...

Then Kerry Young put his cheek down on the cool, moist earth and drew a long breath...

They had him back at Nan's in an hour. Ezra had the bullet out before sundown. It was midnight when he opened his eyes.

At first, he thought he was alone in the room and then realized that he could not be alone; a man alone cannot have that sweet sense of peace and permanence and well being which spread over him like a mantle...

He moved his head slightly and saw her sitting there, straight and stiff and expectant, her face gentler than ever beneath the shaded light.

"Nan," he breathed and she came quickly close.

"Oh, Kerry!" The words were a sob. "And you're... all right?"

"Right! Every thing's right!" He closed his eyes.

"Tip?"

"Ezra says he's done the best job

Playing the beam of light from an electric torch through the branches, you discover presently two glowing spots of ruby red, reflections from a pair of eyes. As your own eyes adjust themselves to the feeble illumination, you can distinguish dimly the shadowy form of a great barred owl.

The hubbub stops immediately, for the bird is puzzled by the spot of light; but as you continue along the trail the owl, now behind you, utters a loud, prolonged whoo-oo-oo-aw that resounds eerily among the trees. Until day-break you hear at intervals the wild ululation of its calls filling the darkened woodland.

The voices of owls are more familiar than their persons, as most of them are active principally at night, and without special search the birds themselves are difficult to see. Their presence, unseen but constantly evident, has caused imagination to play about them until in practically every country in the world there have grown up fables and superstitions regarding owls.

The little owl of Europe, about as large as the American screech owl without the ear tufts of that species, has long been an emblem of wisdom, and in early years was accepted as a special ward of Pallas Athene of the Greeks.

He Only Looks Wise.

The vogue of the owl as an emblem of wisdom is not due to any special intelligence of the bird, but to the conformation of the head, with the two eyes so placed that they look directly ahead like those of man.

As the companion of night-flying witches, or as one of the ingredients in the brews concocted by these trouble-makers, the owl developed a black and unsavory reputation, attested by many references to its evil omen in Shakespeare and other writers.

Among American Indians, owls, though feared at times, were in better repute and were the basis of various lively legends. Zuni tales include stories of one called "gray owl" that lived in a house as a man does. The Pima Indians held that at death the human spirit passed into the body of an owl and, to assist in this migration, they gave owl feathers, kept for the purpose in a special box, to a dying person.

Among the Plains Indians, the Arktara included an owl group as one of their eight mystic societies, and in the sacred rites of this body they used the stuffed skin of an owl with disks of cunningly fitted buffalo horn for eyes.

Owls are found throughout the world from the Arctic regions through the continents and to remote islands in the sea. More than 300 kinds are known, ranging in size from the tiny elf owl, no larger than sparrows, to the powerful horned owl and eagle owl, which are two feet or more in length.

Scientifically, all owls are included in one order, the Strigiformes, in which two families are recognized, one for the barn owls (Tytonidae) and the other (Strigidae) for all other species.

Regardless of their size, owls are instantly identified by their broad faces with prominent disks of feathers about the eyes, coupled with sharp, curved beaks and claws, and long, fluffy feathers. Their nearest relatives are the whistling owls, night-hawks, and goatsuckers.

Formerly it was thought that owls were allied to hawks and falcons, but on careful study it was found that these two groups differ radically in structure. The resemblances are superficial and are due to the form of the beak and claws, which have undergone similar development from seeking the same kinds of foods.

Other Birds Dislike Them.

Most owls are nocturnal and by day sleep in caves, hollow trees, tangles of leaves, or whatever may offer protection. When they are found by other birds, there is high excitement, jays, cardinals, and the like gathering to scold and chatter at these enemies of the night. Crows are more aggressive and often drive the largest owls to seek more secure cover where they may avoid their cawing black tormentors.

The homes of owls are located in hollows of trees, caverns in rocks, or

Waiting for Nightfall and a Meal of Mice.

His evening air of early spring in the Everglades of southern Florida is soft and mild. Delicate scents from blossoms come with the breeze, together with the voices of myriad frogs in incessant chorus from the marshes. Suddenly, from the moss-festooned live oaks in this peaceful background, comes an outburst of melodious laughter, guttural in sound and startling in its abruptness.

In defense of their young, owls are often aggressive and swoop at any and all who chance to pass, sometimes with startling effect when the attack is delivered without warning. A scientist climbing to the nest of a great horned owl once was struck so savagely in the back by one of the parents that the strong talons of the bird drew blood through the heavy clothing he wore.

While walking at dusk near a woodland camp in eastern Kansas, the scientist was startled by something that, without warning, struck his bare head. The aggressor was a little screech owl with a family of young nearby. At other times he has had owls knock off his hat, assisted no doubt by his involuntary flinching as the bird brushed past. In Puerto Rico, country people inform you gravely that a native owl steals the hats of persons who walk the trails at night and carry them off to use them for nests, a superstition probably based on attacks such as those described.

Their Plumage Is Soft.

All owls have soft plumage composed of long, fluffy feathers. The wings have softened margins, so that in flight the birds move without sound, as if they were shadows. In owls, the lower leg, or tarsus, and upper surfaces of the toes, bare in most birds, are covered with feathers, these being reduced or absent only in a few species that inhabit warm countries. The plumage colors run usually to gray, brown, and buff, with lighter markings of buff and gray. White and black are extensive in some, but brighter colors are rare or absent.

Some of the smaller owls have rounded markings on the back of the head, resembling eyes. In South America the country people tell you these birds have four eyes. They can see behind as well as ahead.

The eyes of owls are fixed so immovably in the head, where both are directed forward, that the bird must change the position of the head to alter its line of vision.

Though the majority of owls remain hidden in shaded, secluded places by day, there are a few that are abroad by day or by night indifferently. This is true of the snowy owl, which lives in summer through the long Arctic day, and of the borrowing owls of open country in the new world. The latter delights in resting in the sun, and in broad daylight detects and watches hawks and other birds flying at such great heights that one can barely see them.

What They Eat.

Owls live mostly on animal food which is captured alive, except that occasionally they feed upon rabbits freshly killed by automobiles along our highways, or upon other carcasses. Mice, rats, and other small mammals are regular prey, as are birds of various species.

The barred owl eats many crayfish and fish, while crabs and fish are staple foods of the fish owls of Africa and India, which have featherless legs and rough, horny-surfaced toes to assist in capturing such slippery prey. Horned owls have been known to capture goldfish in ornamental pools, but this is unusual.

Owls, like hawks, tear their prey apart and swallow the pieces entire. During digestion the flesh is assimilated, while bones, fur, feathers, and other indigestible portions are formed into compact pellets, which are regurgitated to leave the stomach empty for another meal. Such pellets accumulate about roosts and, through identification of the bones contained, give a valuable index to the food of the bird concerned.

The great horned owl and snowy owl are fiercely predatory, killing rabbits, squirrels, and other creatures of good size. The former has been known to capture and eat small owls. In the Dominican Republic was seen a young bird of its own kind which had been killed and thrown aside by some native.

Occasionally wild mice increase for various reasons until they form a veritable plague. Under such circumstances short-eared owls gather in abundance and aid in reducing the numbers of the pests. Burrowing owls feed extensively on beetles and other large insects.

NOWADAYS there is one sure way for an executive of a motion picture company to find out whether his company considers him really important or not. If he's a big shot, he's not allowed to fly. That's a hardship when a man is commuting from Hollywood to New York and back again, of course—but hardship or not, he takes trains.

Only last week three of Metro's big men wanted to get from New York to Hollywood in a hurry, and planned to fly; they had done it so often that it meant no more to them than walking down the street; they knew all too well that flying was no more dangerous than any other means of transportation. But at the last minute somebody got wind of their plans. The resulting argument was hot and heavy—but in the end they went by train.

One of them didn't really object, however. He was Howard Dietz, chief of publicity and advertising.

"That's all right with me," he remarked. "I'll win a thousand dollars at bridge on the way out."

There's just no stopping them—I mean these girls who are as determined now not to be blonde as they once were to be as blonde as possible. Jean Harlow started it, of course, by turning "brownette," and now we have Carole Lombard, Alice Faye and Joan Bennett following her example. They seem to feel that it will help them to get more serious roles—quite forgetting that

Ann Harding, who is naturally so blonde, has been doing pretty well with serious roles for a long, long time.

On the other hand, Marion Talley (ex opera star and farmer, now working hard in pictures) has turned blonde for her first screen appearance. If you have seen her, or seen photographs of her in the old days, you're going to be surprised at her appearance; she has lost a lot of weight, and it is a big improvement.

Those Major Bowes amateur stage units have been so successful that Bob ("Believe It Or Not") Ripley is going to have some of his own; the first will begin its tour somewhere in New England the last of April. It will probably include these acts: Little Jeanie, a thirty-pound midget; Grace Murphy's quintuplets, five ballet dances averaging three hundred pounds each; a concert pianist who plays—and well—with his elbows; John Tio and his talking bird; and a man who makes music with his leaves. Bob himself, encountered at a party after the opening of Ringling's circus, was trying to curb a strong desire to go out with them himself.

Frank Parker, who bobs up on so many radio programs, is going to make another picture; his first, you'll recall, was "Sweet Surrender." He's been on the stage, so he's prepared for a movie career.

Speaking of his stage career, the other day Fifi O'Day came to a rehearsal of her radio show with a picture of the cast of "Greenwich Village Follies of 1925." Willie Howard glanced at it, then at Parker, and said, "Frank, there's a fellow in this picture who looks exactly like you."

"Looks like me?" retorted Frank. "It is me. I was a chorus boy."

I wish you could meet Bette Davis. She's an overwhelming young person, because she's so devastatingly frank. No matter what you ask her she'll answer it, and intelligently too—with no regard for whether the movie moguls will like what she says or not. Now some interviewers use rather brutal tactics.

That doesn't work with Bette Davis; she doesn't get angry, she just tells the truth, with a pleasant smile.

"How do you get along with your husband?" someone asked her recently. "There are reports that you've separated."

"Oh, we fight," she replied. "It's my fault; sometimes I simply have to fight, and then nothing will stop me."

ODDS AND ENDS... John Boles doesn't want to be tied down to one company any longer; he's going to free lance... Fredric March felt the same way; thought he was making too many costume pictures... So the first one he signed up for as a free lance was "Mary of Scotland" with Katherine Hepburn... Paramount is going to give us "Beau Geste" again, in color this time, with Gary Cooper in the leading role... "A Message to Garcia" is a fine picture... Jane Withers does fine work in "Gentle Julia"...

Shirley Temple got another raise the other day... Practically all the movie companies are trying to sign up Charles Boyer, who's already under contract... You'll see him before long in "The Garden of Allah"... And in color... Margaret Sullivan's broken arm is holding up two pictures... Myrna Loy will be teamed with Warner Baxter in "To Mary, With Love"; remember them in "Broadway Bill!"

Familiarity

FAMILIARITY makes us careless and unobservant. But there comes a day when we observe and think. Then we suffer, as a boy I loved life and country the sun, as an old divine I see his chambers in the East. I have come in to breakfast dressed in dew. How it used to glisten and sparkle in the morning light! But that is all a thousand years behind.—J. A. Stewart.

Brave deeds are most estimable when hidden... What was finest in them was the desire to hide them.—Farsell.

While the houseparty proceeds gaily, the alluringly beautiful Nora Harriden disappears. She is found lying dead in the shrubbery beneath the window of her room. The insidious killer, loose among the guests, strikes again—slaying the only person able to throw light upon the mystery. Why War Should Be Hated.

Among the many reasons Daniel A. Poling gives for hating war are these:
I hate war because I know its folly—I have watched it waste the substance of the world.
I hate it with terror—the terror of one who has known the string of its torture and the frenzy of its fear.
I hate it with passion—the passion of one who has held its dying against his breast.
I hate it with disillusionment—the disillusionment of one who has gathered up its bloody fragments and remembered its broken promises.
I hate it with agony—the agony of one who has sons to be numbered and daughters to be offered should its guns grow hungry again.

I hate it for the crimson bubbles on all the seas, for the poisoned breath it gives to the wings of the wind and for its fences of skulls that girdle the globe.
I hate it for the men it maims—bodies mutilated eyes blinded, limbs severed, faces shut up forever behind masks.
It hate it because of the young men it spits upon bayonets sown to passion and watered with blood.
I hate it because of the child it orphan and the wife it widows.
I hate it because of the evil passions it unleashes to feed upon the innocent.
I hate it for its ruined cities, hate it for its polluted rivers, hate it for its desecrated altars.
I hate it for the goodwill it destroys, the truth it perverts, the lie it exalts, the murder it decorates, the brotherhood it despoils, and the black damp of suspicion it hangs over all the councils of man.
Any one of these reasons is sufficient to make war detestable to those who must bear the brunt of it, yet we wipe the slate clean when comes the burst of patriotic fervor fanned to a consuming flame by those who stand to profit from war. We forget the waste substances, forget the bloody fragments and broken promises, forget the crimson bubbles on all the seas and the fences of skulls that girdle the globe, forget the mutilated bodies and blinded eyes, the widows and orphans—forget all these things and go into dirty trenches or sacrifice to bear the cost of war.
We will continue to have war until the people of the earth who do the fighting keep this picture that Poling has painted ever before them, and as a barricade against the patriotic spellbinder who pawns his soul to greed.—Exchange.

She Confesses.

"Miss Eleanor" has spiked the "whispering campaign" which the Democrats and New Dealers charged was being made against her throughout the South that she had her picture taken with negroes. She acknowledges to the corn and glories in it. She says, according to a Washington dispatch, that one of the pictures was made when she spoke at Howard University, a government-subsidized institution for the negro race at Washington, as two negro Roosevelt Sapling Army officers were escorting her up the steps of the institution, that she had no objections when the photograph was taken and has none now. This ought to satisfy the satirists of the little Democratic "Me Too's" who slandered Harding in 1920 and who were throwing a spasm every minute because these Roosevelt pictures were being circulated by a Liberty Loving Organization to preserve the Constitution in the South. Already one well-known idolatrous editor worshiper of Roosevelt and "Miss Eleanor" has eaten his little dish of crow over this incident.—Union Republican.

Hoover Pleads For Liberalism.

At San Jose, former President Herbert Hoover told the Young Republicans of California the Republican party must become "the true liberal party of America."
"The party," he said in a message to the state convention of Young Republicans "must furnish the rallying place for all those, whether Republicans or Democrats," who believe in upholding "the standard of American principles."
The former President said the term liberalism was claimed "by every sect that would limit human freedom and stagnate the human soul, whether they be fascists, socialists or new dealers."
"Liberalism is a creed of ordered liberty. Whether the new deal words may be, their actions at almost every point are a threat to the very vitals of liberty. . . . You cannot extend the mastery of government over the daily life of the people without somewhere making it master of people's souls and thoughts."
". . . Liberty and opportunity do not flourish on a deficit of three billion a year. They will be diminished by the taxes which are being deferred for you to pay. Liberty cannot survive if these vast sums are to be used to pile up political influence."
"Nor can liberty survive a continuation of this ghastly failure in our country to restore employment when all the rest of the world has passed the world depression and proved it can be cured."
Hoover said it would be the Republican party's duty to formulate "a courageous and progressive platform which will point the way to the American people for the next generation." He added the Young Republicans should contribute "open minds, fresh idealism, strength and youthful determination."

Political Placards.

Manager Willie Lee Lumpkins announces that no political advertising for Ralph McDonald will mar the landscape of North Carolina during the gubernatorial campaign and calls upon the friends of the Winston-Salem candidate to aid in carrying out this program.
Other candidates could profitably join in this determination. It would not only save them the cost of this printed matter but bridge the resentment that littering the wayside sometimes brings from unexpected sources. And it must be remembered too, that there is a law against placarding trees, automobiles, stone fences and buildings without the owner's permission.
Raleigh officials have ruled that the outdoor advertising tax does not apply to political candidates, because outdoor advertising is not their primary business, and it was feared that overzealous workers would plaster fence and stumps with advertising for their favorites with litter that probably would remain there long after football enthusiasts have made their pilgrimage to the battle field.—Ex.

Credit To Country Press

With the approach of the national presidential election campaign, the importance of the small town and country press is receiving ever-increasing attention in the national capitol, where the campaign strategists are being mapped out.
But the capitol is not the only place where the weekly and small daily newspaper receives its deserved credit as a moulder of public opinion for millions of citizens all over the nation.

Items From "293."

"In the spring a house keeper's fancy seriously turns to thoughts of cleaning"—with apologies to Tennyson or is it Eddie Gust? And when the thoughts of eleven women turn in that direction something is obliged to happen. On a beautiful sunny day recently every woman in the Mocksville W. P. A. sewing room came equipped with cleaning paraphernalia, and what they forgot to bring was supplied by accommodating neighbors. A genuine house-cleaning-orgy in the business district must be something of a novelty, as witnessed by the interested spectators. Many of whom, like Tom Sawyer's friends came to scoff but stayed to help. The dignified deputy sheriff-jailer was most helpful, in fact we had so many offers of assistance that we wondered what the reaction would be at home if some of the wives were in sight. Every window washed inside and out, every shelf cleared and cleaned, every piece of coal lifted tenderly and placed in a safe position. The walls brushed down and the floors mopped. The workers were reeling for a second on any thing handy and mopping their fevered brows before the next onslaught on old man dirt. In rushed a gentleman exclaiming, "What in the world? Where did the accident occur? Was it the ceiling which fell in or the floor that fell out? Where is the victim or the victims? Have you called the Safety Department in Winston?"
When he came up for air, he Gen. Sup. with her most polite and diplomatic manner tried to calm the excited man, and to explain to him the campaign before he could start another verbal barrage. For you see that man was none other than Mr. Fetter, the Safety Engineer. No wonder he almost burst a blood vessel when he walked in and found every woman swathed in a triangular bandage from nose up, every piece of furniture in the middle of the floor, and every yard of cloth heaped in piles wherever there was an available space. We have not yet figured out which sensation was the strongest in him regret or chagrin. He noticed that the stove pipe was slightly askew, and obligingly offered to adjust it. He scaled the hazardous heights, and while he was poised on the top of a rickety step ladder, anchored to the floor by ten tried women, one of the bashful ones said "how about cleaning the cobwebs down while you are up there?" (The poor sup, nearly passed out) but nothing daunted, the man took the hint, and did a swell job of it. We wonder why some of the other heap big chiefs never come around when they could be of some real assistance. And further more, we wish that Mr. Harry Hopkins himself could see the report that he made on us. Thank you Mr. Fetter, we will be more careful and saving with your iodine and ammonia in the future.
It may have been a coincidence, of course but the very next day after we had washed our faces and put on clean apparel, our blessed landlord sent over two "To Rent" signs and asked that we display them in our front windows. Now I ask you, isn't that enough to discourage any ambitious woman?
Well we have had another visit to Salisbury, and as per schedule we went in fear and trembling. You just never can figure on what those people have up their sleeves, and no alibi that has ever been invented or discovered gets by that crew. They know all of the answers. But the Foreman, Supervisors and Workers in Davie know some of them too. The big moguls were there, and up on the rostrum was a great chaat. We were told in most awe-inspiring tones that this chart showed the "Continuous Rating" of every district in the state and had been prepared by the army engineers from the reports sent in from the various projects. It was a masterpiece of perfection from their point of view, not a flaw, not a flaw in their workmanship, not a chance of a mistake in their figuring. And woe be unto the man or woman who had sent in a wrong report, who had made an error, who had not been 100 per cent. efficient on his or her individual project. We thought that they would never get through with the preliminary, and tell us that we were just too far down on the scale of life to ever get our heads above the surface and to crawl out there, go home and not even take time to resign, we were already fired.

During that eternity of waiting we heard something about the Fourth District (Payetteville) being the first in the state and the Sixth (Winston) second. That sounded interesting and we lifted our heads to hear which county had been so superlatively perfect that they had even saved the district in spite of us. Rowan, was the proud lady; and her daughter Davie (who by the way is one hundred years old this year) was second in the district. Feature that! and there are thirteen counties in the district. "They" said that Rowan was ahead, but it will take a stronger magnifying glass than we have yet tried to be able to see the difference. Any how all of those Davie folks walked out of that meeting with a look of pity for mere mortals, and with heads so high that when one stumbled going down the stairs she was quickly reminded of that "Pride going before a fall" stuff. Come into the work room and we will be happy to show you a small chart, which shows old Davie on her way to the top. Each and every man and woman on every project in the county is responsible for this rating it is appreciated by the foremen and supervisors.

The Mocksville unit of Project 293 is all excited over the prospects of the next staff meeting to be held in our town. We are eager for the supervisors from the other counties to see our home, to inspect our work, work from Fork Church and Coolemeec too, to ask questions, to compare us with other projects. We acknowledge reluctantly, but with becoming modesty, that there are a few things that they can teach us, but we know that they can profit from a visit with us. Did some one say something about a haughty spirit? It does not apply to us.

Curious About It.

The straw vote poll now being conducted by some twenty-odd newspapers in North Carolina, with subscriber interest as the main objective, seems to be well conceived and may serve as a fairly dependable index of the sentiment of the citizenry on the gubernatorial race.
But over in Surry county the attempt to poll the registered voters has bumped into a rather unusual state of affair that causes one to wonder. Twenty per cent of all the ballots sent into Surry by the newspaper commissioned to make the poll, have been returned with postmaster's notation that they were "unclaimed" or "unknown," although appearing on the registration books of the county as voters in the various precincts. Ballots had been addressed to every twelfth name appearing on the registration books, regardless of the voters' political faith.
Evidently the election machinery in Surry needs to be taken down and overhauled. Registration books that show twenty per cent of the duly recognized voters as "unknown" to the postmaster of the immediate precinct, looks seriously funny and doesn't make sense.
Of course, over there many of the citizens may be interested in their tobacco beds, getting ready for a bumper crop of low-priced weed, and totally oblivious to what may be at the postoffice for them; or again a large portion of them may have shown the good sense to move to Fredell, but making allowance for everything the matter intrigues almost to the point of overshadowing interest in the poll itself.
For the sake of others who may be as curious as we are, we'd like to hear an explanation.—Statesville Daily.

Secrets of AAA Come to Light

Wallace, Under Pressure, Reveals Big Gifts to Farmers.

Enthusiasm over the new AAA has been somewhat dampened by disclosures about the old AAA that was knocked out by the Supreme Court. When the Administration hastily threw together a new farm bill Congress asked a few general questions about whether it would stand the test of constitutionality and then swallowed it whole. Without public hearings of the chiefs of the Agricultural Department and with no debate on specific details of the plan, Congress later turned over $470,000,000 to Secretary Wallace. It was a blank check rushed through—so that "benefit" payments to farmers might be flowing generously just before election time next November.
One of the witnesses before the subcommittee of the House Appropriations Committee on March 10 was Chester C. Davis, administrator of the old AAA. At this closed House hearing Administrator Davis was asked if he could supply a list of farm owners who had received more than $10,000 under the old AAA. Mr. Davis said it would be a "colossal clerical job." In answer to questions he said he "would be very much surprised" if payments to single individuals or properties ever ran as high as $200,000.

Facts Are Demanded.
After the new AAA was launched and thousands of employees were at work preparing to start the gentle, election time, rain of checks, Senator Vandenberg of Michigan offered a resolution in the senate demanding information on payments to farmers of $10,000 or more. Immediately Senator Joseph R. Robinson hastened to the rescue of the New Deal and its politically important record of gifts to farmers. He used parliamentary tricks to delay any probe. Secretary Wallace, of the Agricultural Department, was inclined to be humorous about it. He told the press that if the amounts paid were made public it might tempt evil persons to kidnap the farmers' daughters.

The demand for facts, however, and the reluctance of the New Deal to supply them, attracted so much attention over the country that Secretary Wallace was forced to reveal some of the items on the public records of disbursement of public funds. Following are some of the facts admitted by the Secretary.

Some Huge Awards.
One large cotton plantation operator received $123,747 in one year, for not growing cotton.
The world's largest hog-farming company received $157,000 in a year. This was the company's reward for feeding its hogs with garbage instead of corn.

Sugar benefits of $1,067,685 went to a Florida company, $981,064 to a Puerto Rican producer and $1,022,087 to a Hawaiian concern. The payments were benefits for not growing sugar cane.

A Florida concern received $41,094 for not raising tobacco.

A California concern received $65,768 for not growing rice.

Peanut growers did not fare so well. The largest payment for not growing peanuts was $3,000.
One of the items on the Secretary's list was a payment of more than $30,000 to Thomas D. Campbell, "wheat king." Mr. Campbell and his associates have raised wheat and flax on their own properties for years and they also have rented extensive acreage. He has rented land from the Indians in the west at bargain rates, ranging from 50 cents to $1.50 an acre. On this Indian land Mr. Campbell was paid about $7 an acre for not growing wheat.

In view of the importance of this belated information on AAA some Senators and Representatives point to the wisdom of thoroughly airing WPA before more billions are thrown into that program.

You Tell Them.

The Gentleman from Georgia, Clyde A. Erwin, who was born in Atlanta, February 8, 1897, who also tarried awhile in Jonesboro, South Carolina, where he was principal of a school in 1916-17, has announced himself a candidate to succeed himself as superintendent of public instruction in North Carolina. If it was a crime for Dr. McDonald, as Clyde Hoey charges, to be born in Illinois, and tarried awhile in Arkansas what is the long-haired Al Smith 1928 booster going to do about Erwin?—Ex.

Looks now like McDonald will be the next governor of North Carolina, and Landon the next president of the United States.

Why don't the democrats elect Harry Hopkins president. He seems to be running the country and spending all the money.

Office seekers in Davie county seem to be about as scarce as this democratic prosperity that was promised us some four years ago.

Ralph McDonald may not be the democratic nominee for governor, but he has Clyde Hoey and Sandy Graham scared within an inch of their political lives.

Under this democratic administration our best fishermen says that the fish in Davie streams have got too lazy to bite. Piddlers Aid has many sins to answer for.

One of Clyde Hoey's campaign managers says that if McDonald is nominated for Governor, Gilliam Grissom, Republican, will be the next governor of North Carolina.

Our soldier boys will soon receive their bonus money, but President Roosevelt will not receive any thanks from them. He did everything possible to keep them from receiving this money.

As the old saying goes, "now is the time for all good democrats to come to the aid of the machine in North Carolina," or McDonald is going to bury the said machine so deep that even Franklin Delano can't pull it out.

Everything seems to be over except the shouting. It is now too late to file for any county office. Those who didn't file last week will have to wait another two years before they can get a chance to approach the pie counter.

Candidates for governor have been flooding this office with columns of political matter, asking us to publish same. When checks are enclosed these articles will receive our careful attention. Otherwise these lengthy articles find their way to the waste basket.

It seems that practically all the fruit in this section has been killed by the heavy freeze of a few weeks ago, and the frosts that have followed. We are hoping that at least a part of the blackberry crop will be spared. With all fruit crops cut short the humble blackberry will be worth going after this summer.

Lengthy speeches made by McDonald, Graham and Hoey, democratic candidates for governor, are being received almost daily at this office. Life is too short for us to even read all these speeches, much less put them in type. If all that these gentlemen say about each other is the truth, then neither of them is the man for this big office.

From present indications the democratic governorship race in Davie county will be between McDonald and Hoey, with the odds being slightly in favor of McDonald. So far as we can learn all the boys on the state payroll are against McDonald. This will help him some among the farmers and the factory and mill employees. In our opinion Hoey and McDonald will be the two high men in the second primary.

Since the sale of wine and beer has been legalized in Davie county, drunkenness has increased from 25 to 100 per cent, according to reports. Some folks argue that wine and beer is not intoxicating, despite the fact that both contain alcohol. We have heard some people declare that dogs didn't go mad, and others that the bite of a poisonous snake wouldn't make anyone sick. Just mix a few bottles of beer with a pint or two of this chemical wine and note the result.

Return From Delightful Trip.

M. R. Swicegood has recently visited relatives in and near Marshall, N. C. The winding roads and quick curves made one almost meet himself in the face, though the roads were in good condition considering the extreme winter weather and the scenery was wonderful. The friendly hospitality of the people, with running ice cold water in the homes. Well supplied with fresh vegetables, fruits and milk give one real appetites and such a quiet place to rest and while the time away.

Mr. Swicegood also visited relatives in Knoxville, Cleveland and Chattanooga, Tenn., while away. He used his car for part of the trip, and made the remainder by bus and train. He reports crops in bad shape on account of dry weather. He had meant to go Arkansas and Oklahoma, but decided that there was no place in the world as good as Davie county.

J. C. Sanford returned Saturday from a two weeks business trip through West Virginia.

Dr. McDonald Speaks.

Democrats and Republicans from practically every section of the county assembled at the court house Wednesday afternoon to hear Dr. Ralph McDonald, of Forsyth, one of the numerous democratic candidates for Governor, lambast the democratic machine, rip into the Republicans, and tell the voters what he proposed to do, if nominated and elected. Dr. McDonald made a very good speech, and told his attentive audience what he thought of the political machine that is running things in this state. He denounced the infamous sales tax, and told the folks where the state could get the money to operate longer and better schools, do away with the sales tax, lower the price of auto tags, and balance the state budget. A majority of democrats present seemed to be McDonald men. Despite the busy season, a fairly large crowd was present.

Notice To Farmers.

The progress made in the New Soil Conservation Program is good. Many farmers have filled out work sheets which are necessary if a person expects to receive any benefit for retiring cotton and tobacco acreages and for soil building practices this year. We realize that this is a busy season and it was not convenient for all interested persons to see the committee men on last Friday and Saturday. For the convenience of the farmers another schedule of meeting has been arranged. Committee men will be ready to help fill out work sheets on Monday and Tuesday, May 18 and 19 at the following places: Smoot's Store, Sheffield, Four Corners, Farmington, Smith Grove School, Bixby, Livengood's Store and Cana. Those who wish to fill out the work sheets may do so in the County Agent's Office any day.

Bailey's Revival.

Our recent revival at Bailey's Chapel on Advance Charge was very successful. Members and friends of all the churches on the charge attended the services. The members were drawn closer to Christ while others surrendered their lives to Him. Mr. and Mrs. C. J. Taylor directed the song services in a splendid way. Brother F. E. Howard, our pastor, preached some of the most stirring sermons that I have ever heard and I feel that I am speaking for all who heard him. As a result of this revival the following joined the church: J. Nelson Tucker, Mavis L. Tucker, Spencer W. Robertson, Martha A. Tucker, Juliette Boger, Laura L. Boger, Samuel P. Myers, John H. Hudson, Henry C. Livengood, Debby L. Livengood, Mildred E. Spry, B. Mable Myers, A. Lorine Robertson, John Henry Robertson, Paul W. Robertson, and Mable M. Minor. MRS. NETTIE A. BARNES.

P. O. S. of A. News.

The Coolemees degree team has been busy for the past six weeks initiating men into the order. Some fine fellows were initiated in Camp No. 2 at Winston-Salem which all seemed to enjoy. Seven new men were added to the roll in Camp No. 25 at Advance after which the degree team including the regular members totaled 88 were treated to a fish fry which you could tell they enjoyed by the fragments left on their plates.

Six were added to Coolemees Camp and a fine talk made by several members. At a meeting of the camps of Davie Forsyth District held in Mocksville Monday night, all camps represented with their delegates to the State Convention to be held in Concord, May 21st and 22nd.

A. J. Safrir represents Camp No. 1, M. F. Charles and W. L. Womble Camp No. 2, of Winston-Salem, Rev. F. E. Howard and A. L. Crouse represents Advance, H. Hoots and Earl Hammer, represents Mocksville, C. B. Hoover and R. V. Alexander represents Coolemees Camp.

Only That and Nothing More

The fat man was trying to find some tropical clothes in the Far South resort. He tried most every store in town, and patient clerks had politely made a pretense of looking over their stocks and advising him they were just out of his size. Finally he ran across a clerk more truthful than diplomatic—who—after looking him over—said:

"Frankly, mister, we carry nothing in stock that would fit you, except collar buttons and handkerchiefs."—American Legion Monthly.

The theater was in an uproar. They're calling for the author. "But I can't make a speech!" replied the manager. The manager grabbed the playwright and impelled him along the passage. As he shoved him toward the curtain he said curtly: "Well, just go in front and tell them you're sorry." Hudson (N. Y.) Star.

One King Dead. Next?
One Lynched; One Jumped
Hitler Picks Successor
Three Kinds of Gold

King Fuad, King of Egypt, dead means nothing to 130,000,000 Americans or to 15,000,000,000 other human beings on earth. It means much to England, real ruler of Egypt, now obliged to find another king to "behave himself, do as England says," and hold down Egypt's anti-British hatred.

Arthur Brisbane

A mob seized Lint Shaw, fifty-year-old negro, and lynched him on the usual charge, "not waiting for a trial." Joe Bowers, sentenced to 25 years for mail robbery, locked in the island fortress of Alcatraz, tried to escape by climbing ten feet of plain wire, two feet of barbed wire, and jumping down a 60-foot cliff into the water. He climbed while sharpshooters pumped bullets into him, and jumped down the cliff. Asked when "booked" at Alcatraz, "Who is to be notified if you die?" Bowers replied: "Nobody; nobody cares whether I die or not."

Hitler apparently has chosen his successor "in case." In the person of Air Minister Goering, now made "assistant dictator," with control of two great German problems of raw materials and foreign exchange.

In New York, 175 naval cadets from the German cruiser Emden, name well remembered from the war, explore the city, guarded by detectives in case of hostile demonstrations.

Commercial boycotts of Germany, organized in New York, have done more harm to the Nazi government than could be done by any mob attack on German consulates.

California possesses "three kinds of gold": yellow gold, of which there is plenty left in the ground; "black gold," which is the oil in lakes thousands of feet down, and the "white gold," water from the mountains, first used to develop power, then to irrigate crops.

Another gold, more important than those three, combined, is the gold of education.

Driving through this country, if you see a particularly fine building, tall columns, wide grounds, fields for healthy play, that is a public school. Once it would have been the prison or feudal castle.

You see another building, almost as impressive as the high school. That is a public library. The accumulated knowledge of the world is free.

Mrs. Grace Warren Dubois, sixty-two years old, was allowed to keep her seat while the judge sentenced her to life imprisonment for killing her son. Ordinarily convicts must stand for sentence.

It is said she thought her family "too aristocratic" to live in such times as these, and wished to kill them all. Another son testified against her.

Newsboys cry "What do you read?" The Niagara of books pouring from the presses, a vast majority forgotten as they are born, make many ask "What shall I read?" Of the books that every one must know, many are unnecessary long, will not be read, and need condensation. In this day of newspapers, moving pictures, and radio.

If some publisher would issue a "bookshelf" squeezed down from 12 feet to 2 feet, that would be useful.

Paris perceives that following recent elections extreme radicals will be powerful in the new chamber, and those that have money left begin panicky selling. Bank of France shares drop violently, meaning lack of confidence in government stability, with fear of war in all minds.

The last war knocked the franc from 19 cents to 4 cents. What would another war do?

When stock gambling starts, it moves rapidly. Since March last year, stock prices have gone up 60 per cent, business has increased 18 per cent, employment only 5 per cent. Not much cheerfulness in that.

Since last March the New York Stock exchange "values" have increased by twenty thousand million dollars. Excellent "bait" for the ignorant.

New Jersey citizens dropped from relief to invade legislative halls, camp out, sleep on the floor, promise to remain until New Jersey supplies money and food.

Ewing township, New Jersey, with 8,000 population, taking 450 families off the dole, told them officially to go out and beg. Begging being illegal, each family was provided with a begging license. That may be called "economic relief."

Tokyo worries about Russia "plotting a war against Japan," but no plotting is necessary. Russia knows the location of every Japanese city, town and factory. It would be necessary only to declare war and start dropping bombs, particularly bombs that spread fire.

Starting a war for foreign countries is as easy as "shooting up a gambling game" among our racketeers; no secrecy or plotting necessary.

House Hurriedly Passes New Revenue Bill—Roper Stirs
Business Men to Sharp Retort—Young Farouk Becomes King of Egypt.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

WITH extraordinary speed which the opposition considered indecent, the administration's new $803,000,000 revenue bill was pushed through the house. The vote, 287 to 98, was almost strictly along party lines. The roll call showed 82 Republicans and only 11 Democrats voted against the measure, while four Republicans deserted the minority to cast their lot with the administration.

The bill was handed to the senate whose finance committee, headed by Pat Harrison, had been studying it in secret sessions in order to be prepared for the public hearings that opened two days after the house had acted. There had been predictions that this committee would modify the measure radically, but the opposition to it in Democratic ranks seemed to have faded away and its passage by the senate without material change was deemed probable.

As passed by the house the bill provides:

1. A graduated tax on corporation income which, it is estimated, will force distribution of $3,360,000,000 more in dividends and yield the government an additional $820,000,000 annually.
2. A "windfall" tax on unpaid or refunded processing taxes imposed under the invalidated AAA, which is expected to yield $100,000,000.
3. Continuation of the capital stocks and excess profits taxes for six months to yield $35,000,000.
4. A refund of $35,000,000 to processors who suffered financial losses under the old AAA.

THE $3,000,000,000 Frazier-Lemke farm mortgage bill, with its threat of currency inflation, was blasted out of its pigeonhole Friday and assured of a vote in the house during the present session.

Five representatives signed the petition to remove the bill from the house rules committee, completing the 213 signatures necessary to bring up the bill.

Speaker Byrns, Chairman O'Connor of the rules committee, and the other Democratic chieftains, by sheer political power, are said to have held the farm-mortgage, currency-expansion measure in the committee for more than a year under express orders of President Roosevelt.

The Frazier-Lemke bill proposes to amortize farm mortgages by the issuance of $3,000,000,000 in new currency. It provides for a sharp downward revision of interest rates on mortgages.

DANIEL C. ROPER, secretary of commerce, appeared before the Chamber of Commerce of the United States at its annual meeting in Washington and warned its members, most of whom are persistent critics of New Deal policies, that unless private enterprise takes up the slack in employment, business must pay the relief bill out of earnings.

"It is the responsibility of all business and industrial enterprises," said Roper, "and not of one particular segment of the government to increase its efforts for greater employment. If a substantial measure of increased re-employment does not take place the taxation for relief purposes will come largely from business earnings. There must be re-employment or a longer period of increased taxation."

Roper admitted that the administration had fostered bureaucracy, but insisted that it was occasioned by an emergency, and responsibility for its increase again lay at the door of private business.

Various members of the chamber replied spiritedly. Roy C. Osgood, vice president of the First National Bank of Chicago, predicted that if the administration embarked on a sound fiscal program that would inspire confidence, business would make rapid strides toward recovery. He criticized the pending tax on corporate earnings as impracticable and a brake on business expansion and stability.

Fred H. Clausen, president of the Van Brunt Manufacturing Company of Horicon, Wis., told the chamber that the rising tide of public spending had been "rolling onto our people for five years," and there was no end in sight. He declared that the re-employment mandates laid down by President Roosevelt, Secretary Roper and others were practically impossible in the light of the increased burdens heaped on industry.

The American Federation of Labor reported that "little or no progress" had been made in re-employment during the first quarter of this year.

The federation estimated 12,134,000 persons were unemployed in March. Seasonal gains in business and agriculture, returning 559,000 persons to work, were "about normal," the report said.

CONTINUING the policy of centralizing control over the activities of American citizens, the senate passed a new vocational education bill introduced by Senator Walter F. George of Georgia and supported by Majority Leader Robinson of Arkansas. It was strongly opposed by Senator King of Utah, Democrat, who insisted education was a responsibility of the states, not of the federal government.

The measure authorizes an annual appropriation of $12,000,000 to be distributed among the states on a matching basis, in proportion to population. In addition it authorizes $1,200,000 a year to be allotted for the payment of salaries and travel expenses of vocational teachers, and $1,000,000 a year to be allotted for the preparation of teachers and supervisors.

FUAD I, king of Egypt, died of a gangrenous throat infection at his country place near Cairo at the age of sixty-eight. The crown prince, Farouk, a sixteen-year-old pupil in the royal military academy at Woolwich, England, was immediately proclaimed king and started for Egypt, sailing from Marseilles on a British liner escorted by a British warship in order to avoid going by way of Italy.

Before his death King Farouk. Fuad named a regency council of three to govern the country until Farouk comes of age. The young king, who is six feet tall and well educated, hopes to return to England to complete his studies at Woolwich. It was feared in Cairo that Fuad's death would have an adverse effect on the negotiations for a new Anglo-Egyptian treaty which will give Egypt a greater measure of freedom from British control.

Fuad, a descendant of Mohammed Ali, founder of the Egyptian royal house, was the youngest son of Khedive Ismail Pasha "the magnificent" Egyptian sovereign from 1863 to 1879.

NO OTHER member of congress has been having so lively a time as has Marion A. Zioncheck of Washington state, the playboy of the Western World. He has been arrested, jailed and fined, and has fought with the police; and the other day he suddenly decided to marry Miss Ruby Louise Nix, a stenographer in the accounting division of the PWA at Annapolis. With a Washington license he dashed around looking for a minister who had left the city several years ago. Then he rushed to Maryland, obtained another license, woke up a domestic and wife. Next day Marion led Mrs. Zioncheck into the gallery of the house, and the members all arose and cheered them. Perhaps his actions will be a trifle more conventional hereafter.

REICHSFUHRER HITLER has made Hermann Wilhelm Goering controller of national economics, and he has decreed an era of Spartan simplicity for the German people. Goering summoned the commissars for raw materials to a conference and warned them they must further restrict imports and help draft measures to increase exports. Only goods vitally necessary to the army and materials needed to produce goods for foreign export must be allowed to enter Germany, Goering decreed.

Officials of the propaganda ministry further darkened the picture of the near future by telling the press it must prepare the public for a "stiffening of relations between France and Germany as soon as the French elections are finished." They also deplored the fact that relations with England have suffered.

ITALY'S victorious troops in northern Ethiopia continued their advance on Addis Ababa, though it was somewhat retarded by the efforts of the natives to blow up the roadways and otherwise harass the invaders. The Italian motorized columns in this desert is the most formidable yet formed in this war and is notable for the large number of white troops included.

General Graziana's southern army, meanwhile, was driving toward Harar, second city of the empire, in three columns. The Ethiopians were putting up stiff resistance at various points but everywhere were driven back, according to Italian dispatches.

When the Italian forces reached Debra Birhan, only 75 miles from Addis Ababa, Emperor Haile Selassie ordered the capital city left undefended, hoping the invaders would occupy it without bloodshed. The government prepared to move out, and the native inhabitants all settled for the hills. Foreigners took refuge in the legations, the Americans going to the British compound where there was a bomb-proof shelter.

SENATOR ALBEN W. BARKLEY of Kentucky, who was temporary chairman of the Democratic national convention in 1932 and as such delivered the keynote speech, will serve in the same capacity at the Philadelphia convention in June, outlining the issues of this year's campaign as his party views them.

Senator Joseph T. Robinson of Arkansas will be the permanent chairman again. Yet another repeater will be former Judge John E. Mack of New York. Four years ago he placed Franklin D. Roosevelt in nomination, and he will do it again in June.

These selections were made by the committee on arrangements. Other officers of the convention chosen, are: Lee Barnes of Alabama, chief doorkeeper; Mrs. J. Borden Harriman, national committeewoman of the District of Columbia, hostess of the convention, with Mrs. Agnes Collins Dunn of New Hampshire as assistant; Col. Edward C. Halsey, secretary of the senate, sergeant at arms; Representative Clarence Cannon of Missouri, parliamentarian, assisted by Representative John J. O'Connor of New York; W. Forbes Morgan, secretary of the convention.

National chairman Farley said that the two-thirds rule, which has prevailed in Democratic conventions for a century, will not be abolished. The rules committee will be headed by Senator Bennett Clark of Missouri and it will report for abrogation of the two-thirds rule as well as elimination of the unit rule. The latter binds the state delegations to abide by the decision of a majority of the delegation. According to Mr. Farley, these changes will not prevent the practically unanimous nomination of President Roosevelt.

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT made what might be considered the first of his campaign speeches before the National Democratic club in New York city. Tammany was there in full force, but such disgruntled Democrats as Al Smith and John J. Raskob were conspicuous by their absence. Mr. Roosevelt declared his purpose to bring more food, higher prices and better homes for the people.

"If you increase buying power," he said, "prices will go up; more goods will be sold. Wages ought to and must go up with prices. This does not mean unsound inflation or skyrocketing prices; this should be avoided just as we seek to avoid bankruptcy sale values."

Turning to his critics with sarcasm, the President said "some individuals are never satisfied." Referring to charges of extravagance and mounting deficits, he said people complain to him about "the current costs of rebuilding America, about the burden on future America." He insisted that the measure should not be the three-billion-dollar deficit of this year but the assertion that the national income has risen thirty-five billions in 1932 to sixty-five billions in 1936.

CIVIL war in Austria became a possibility as the quarrel between the Fascists led by Prince Ernst von Starhemberg and the clerical and monarchist elements became acute. Government officials, however, were trying desperately to patch up the trouble.

Prince Von Starhemberg, who is vice chancellor, in a defiant speech at Horn warned his political opponents that his lawbreaker, or home guard, would be dissolved "only over my dead body."

Chancellor Kurt Schuschnigg, speaking at Baden, retorted that "Austria is not Italy and Austrians are not Fascists."

Von Starhemberg asserted that if internal foes press too hard there will be a "repetition of 1934"—when the helmeted triumphed in a short but bloody civil war against Socialists. False friends surround Schuschnigg, von Starhemberg said, and the helmeted plans to protect him from them.

For Austria, said Starhemberg, there are three possibilities—a continuation of the authority of the state, Nazism, or communism. He asserted the helmeted is determined to preserve the Fascist system and would continue as a separate organization.

CONTESTS aided by Mrs. Oliver Harriman, New York society leader, and Alfred E. Smith, Jr., were barred from the mails as "lotteries" in orders signed by Postmaster General Farley. The orders were directed against the National Conference for Legalizing Lotteries, Inc., of which Mrs. Harriman is president, and the Golden Stakes Advertising company, of which young Smith is vice president and counsel.

In the latter case a temporary injunction restraining the New York postmaster from enforcing the order was obtained from Federal Judge Knox in New York.

ARMY and navy officials were reported to be concerned over a new treaty with Panama which is being secretly considered by the government. It was showed it provides for "joint conversion" rather than for "joint defense" of the Canal Zone in event of aggression, and control of lands and waters outside the jurisdiction of the United States. If necessary, is reported by this country in the treaty.

Washington Digest

National Topics Interpreted by William Bruckart
National Press Building Washington, D. C.

Washington.—One swallow does not make a summer nor does one statement, even though from a high official, make a condition absolute. But one statement from a high official under the present New Deal relief setup comes rather close to disclosing the transcendent importance of the nation's relief problem in American economy at this time.

I refer to the recent testimony by Harry A. Hopkins, Works Progress Administrator and professional reliever, before the house committee on appropriations. He told that group a few days ago that 3,855,000 heads of families or unattached persons were receiving a livelihood for themselves and their families from the federal government on March first of this year. If this be true, and it can hardly be disproved, there are nearly fifteen million persons dependent directly upon federal assistance. And the condition appears even worse when it is shown that about ten million others are receiving assistance from state, county and city relief or charitable organizations. In short, the Hopkins testimony reveals that about twenty per cent of all of our people are living on relief money.

These figures are astounding. They are made the more amazing when one considers that the condition exists even after the New Deal has expended approximately twenty-one billions in its three years of government management, the bulk of the outgo being directly chargeable to what Mr. Roosevelt has consistently maintained was an emergency.

I have reported to you intermittently heretofore the various stages through which Reliever Hopkins has gone in his search for means to solve the relief problem. I have been among those observers here who have felt that even though Mr. Hopkins lacks practical experience in commercial life and even though he casts aside every consideration except those inherent in the mind of a man who has devoted his life professionally to relief work, that he should be given time to solve the problem. It seems to me, however, that he has had ample time to find the answer if he is ever going to provide a solution. Neither he nor President Roosevelt has given any indication yet that they know the answer or even have a clue to it. The net result of their efforts to date has been the expenditure of money in unprecedented amounts and the piling up of a debt, the like of which this country never has known.

Mr. Hopkins has gone about his job snugly and with that apparent complacency that characterizes the official who is convinced that he alone is equipped to do a particular job. By his attitude, he has created in congress a feeling that he thinks he is a superior being and if anything makes a congressman hot under the collar, it is to see a member of the executive branch exhibit a pose that the congressmen are dumbbells. Some of them are, of course, but that is not true of all and it is fast doing Mr. Hopkins no good at all to show arrogance towards the men who go out and campaign directly for the votes of the people.

I said that the relief problem was of transcendent importance in governmental affairs at this time. That is true because I believe the conviction is growing that the whole New Deal policy on relief is impractical and visionary; that it is founded upon a wrong psychology; that it is creating in this nation the greatest mass of panhandlers and "the world owes me a living" type or class of individuals that has ever existed anywhere and that, in addition the men who are doing the job for the federal government lack the ability to understand its whole significance.

As proof of the observations I have just stated, let me point out how the demands for vast expenditures of money and wholesale methods of relief in congress have subsided in congress. Time was when a half dozen so-called welfare workers, college professors or organization leaders could get a hearing by the simple crook of a finger before a congressional committee. Such men as Senator La Follette of Wisconsin, and Senator Coghlan of Colorado, and the late Senator Cutting of New Mexico, to mention only a few, would weep salty tears in senate speeches; they would call for ten billions for this and five other things and about that people were starving in the midst of plenty. And they were starving in the midst of plenty, but the shouting and the tumult raised by these political saviors did not provide a solution for the problem. I have a hunch that the silence of such men as these through the last year can mean only that they now see they were off on the wrong foot. They cannot help but realize that their theories were all wet, because Mr. Hopkins certainly has disproved the value of their plans.

Another indication of how congress feels is the movement to divide the billion and a half relief fund, which President Roosevelt asked, between

Mr. Hopkins and Public Works Administrator Ickes. The President demanded that congress give the whole fund out that way eventually but the relief against Mr. Hopkins cannot be denied. It is violent and only a part of it has come to the surface. The congressmen could not wait to see the flow of money cut off in election year so they maneuvered a portion of the money to Mr. Ickes. Now, it is currently rumored that Mr. Ickes, who never has liked Mr. Hopkins, has done some lobbying the fine underground manner of which he is capable. He sincerely believes that the use of funds in the construction of permanent things like bridges, roads and bridges gives the workers for their money. But he is not the ground swell against Mr. Hopkins is possessed any understanding of the science of the times he would. It thus far he has given no indication that he understands what it means.

Where will it all end?
The answer to this relief problem is not now enough to be known.
What's the Answer? guess.
Let us look at a brief review. When President Roosevelt took hold of the relief problem early in his administration, he advanced two theories. They were to solve our problems and solve them quickly. He urged the NRA and PWA, which with the AAA, form the first battalion of the alphabet army. The NRA was designed to manage business and indirectly force employment by the shortening of hours and the spread of work. The PWA was to provide a lot of construction jobs immediately, giving work to those absorbed in private commerce and industry and thus take up the slack in buying power of individuals had been restored.

By November, 1933, it became evident to unbiased observers that the NRA and PWA were falling apart. The mark, so, out of the President's hat came the CWA. Congress promptly provided funds for the Civil Works Administration—and here is the professional reliever, Mr. Hopkins, on the scene—could he manage what had not been restored by PWA? had not been restored to jobs in commerce and industry by NRA.

It was not long until CWA was much in disrepute as the night schemes for providing employment. I believe it was in even greater disrepute because ordinary citizens could utter waste and the reckless squandering of money occurring under CWA for its relief raking and stone cutting and other nonessential job-creating results. CWA went the way of many sound propositions.

Forward then came FERA. It was a proposition of emergency relief. Washington writers were deluged with speeches and statements that should be allowed to start. The efforts of the treasury were spent with a $4,850,000,000 pushed forth. In every section of the country, federal money was distributed and distributed in Washington were none too careful how they passed it out. In parallel lines with FERA, the politicians turned to the right. They saw the money and from predict to pinnacle of politics they were on the job and they have been on the job ever since.

Last year, the President became convinced that there was too much waste in that FERA was a waste of money. He was saying, "Let us use to work when the government would feed them in course of quick change in course."

With this change in course came locking of horns between Mr. Hopkins and Ickes. Mr. Ickes was by the simple expedient of a new federal agency. Bounding forth came Mr. Hopkins' own brain child, WPA. Mr. Hopkins' own brain child, WPA, stands for Works Progress Administration, a different name, the initials to those who have studied the situation, spell FERA and CWA combined. The President announced in his country that "this business of relief must end." Those who could not be employed must be taken care of by the states and local governments and those who were employable would be taken off relief but the federal government for the funds which the federal government passed out to them. The result has been a considerable mess and there is not a day goes by that congressmen do not reveal cruel results of malice and destitution and hardship and privation unparalleled in the United States.

Where will it all end?
"This business of relief" is said to be whatever name the alphabet agency in Washington may be known. It can be only relief and there can be no doubt that it must be continued. Although President Roosevelt has demonstrated his willingness to make shifts in his program, it is becoming more and more evident that a fundamental alteration of his whole system must be undertaken.

Max Gardner, one time governor of North Carolina, came very near calling Sandy Graham a liar last week. Suppose he had.

Sandy Graham, one of the numerous democratic candidates for governor, delivered a very good speech to 51 democrats and Republicans in the court house Monday afternoon. Sandy rapped on Mc Donald and Hoey and insisted that all good democrats should vote for him.

Hon. Clyde R. Hoey, who is one of the numerous democratic candidates for governor, will speak at the court house here next Tuesday, May 26th, at 2 o'clock, p. m. We are hoping to hear Clyde, and we trust that he will have a big crowd out on that date. He is a pretty good fellow outside of being a democrat.

All candidates for offices in Davie county, who want announcements in The Record, should get their copy to our office this week, as we print but two more editions before the primary. Let the voters in the county know who you are, what office you are running for, and what you propose to do, or try to do, if nominated in June and elected in November.

Farmington Finals.

At 8 p. m. on Wednesday, the 20th the Senior play, "Bachelor's Choice," will be given. This is a royalty play and should furnish an evening of good entertainment. Friday at 8 p. m. the Class Night Exercises will be held and Saturday morning, the 23rd at ten-thirty there will be a Declaration and Reading Contest. This is an addition to the commencement program and we hope to make it an annual event. Immediately after the contest the Seventh Grade Diplomas will be awarded. At noon a picnic lunch will be served on the grounds.

The public is invited to come and spread lunch with us. In the afternoon there will be a ball game between Farmington and Hanes Cubs of the Bi-County League. At 8 p. m. the Graduation program will be given. Mr. Sanford Martin, Editor of the Winston-Salem Journal will make the address, after which the High School Graduates will receive their diplomas.

Church Supper.

There will be a church supper Saturday evening May 23, beginning at 6 p. m., at J. M. Everhardt's near Greasy Corner. There will be plenty of good eats, such as chicken stew, hot dogs, fruits, ice cream. There will be a nice quilt given away to the lucky one. Public invited. Proceeds go for the benefit of Concord church.

Republican Candidate for House of Representatives.

I favor checking of trend toward centralization of Power in Raleigh and restoration to the people the right of Self Government, to which they are entitled under a Democracy.

I favor a reduction in State employees under the present system; with more pay for some and less pay for others that we do employ.

I favor all laws being made and ratified by the House and Senate; and not by boards as some are being made now.

I favor laws holding the Highway Commission responsible for damage to property along the highways, and forcing them to pay for same.

I favor the absolute abolishment of the State Highway Patrol under the present system; and a reorganization that is more fair and honest to the public.

I favor enforcement of the Prohibition laws of North Carolina absolutely.

I favor Election laws to prohibit absentee voting by any one in any county in the State of North Carolina.

I am opposed to the present sales tax system, and favor getting the tax to run the state government from those who are able to pay it.

Uncommon Sense

When today we speak of we have in mind a man who

New Pioneer brings back from his wand skins of beavers and bad muskrats.

Today the pioneers have perished from the backwoods the reasons for this is that there are no more backwoods, another reason is that the pioneers are scarce south of the line, and it hardly pays them.

The pioneers of today are engineers and chemists. They explore, not the woods which for many years were opened.

It is they who build ships through the air at hundreds an hour, and who are building things that speed almost a cost as that.

It is they who create uses which a few years ago were unknown, but which now have necessities to the practice of the modern arts.

Many of these pioneers are chemists and surgeons, who by can save lives which a few would certainly have been who can restore to strength victims of injuries which would in 1920 have been hopeless.

Every year colleges and schools are turning out men become pioneers in industry, and whose labors are revolutions in many directions.

There will come a time, when these men will utilize the water of the country, do away with fuel—though they may utilize the coal for dyes products needed by chemists.

Elemental gases never before are widely employed. Helium, long unknown, is driftable through the air, prove indispensable in time.

Here is a pioneering which every tree or sweep will credit its way, which has discovered forces heretofore unknown, and which rapidly, by bounds, is supplying to mankind of the earth never before.

What it may accomplish, are we today have not even a program of research and the days go by to lighten the burdens, and to supply the future which he can employ his own advantage.

I am beginning to wonder people of this country do time that

Time and Travel Distance American and if you

ve out of the car window constantly see gangs of men work reducing curves, but hills and in other ways show time required to move trains place to another.

The streamlined type of further decreased the time from coast to coast.

Meanwhile men have been added, and the journey from New York to San Francisco or Los Angeles which used to require months of ox cart times can be made in hours.

Transcontinental journeys come a matter of a few days. But what does the man leaving New York, suddenly find set down across the bay to San Francisco do with the time saved?

As a rule, nothing important. He talks to his friends, amazing speed with which the continent; perhaps he sees a good, then goes out to sea, or takes a trip up to Mount Tamalpais.

But has he gained any rapidity of his journey? It seems to me that if eliminate all the mad rush places in the least possible would gain much more pleasure.

I do not think we ought to waste as much time to a journey as Columbus did. I do believe that if we took time and then to look around acquainted with the people in distant sections of the world be better for us all.

A child can make a trip in street and back, and get interest and instruction out of it.

Men and women who travel pleasure have no end of it. But it has been my experience who engage in it are interested in just "getting there" are by what they see and experience on their way. I do not advocate the "back yard" method of saving time.

But even that is better than the old way and there so the word can bring of the brief.

Uncommon Sense

© Bell Syndicate—WNU Service

When today we speak of a pioneer we have in mind a man with a long rifle and a coon skin cap who makes his livelihood by discovering new rivers and bringing back from his wanderings the skins of beavers and badgers and muskrats.

Today the pioneers have disappeared from the backwoods. One of the reasons for this is that there aren't any more backwoods. Another is that the people are scarce south of the Canadian line, and it hardly pays to gather them.

The pioneers of today are scientists and engineers and chemists.

They explore, not the woods, but fields which for many years were never opened.

It is they who build ships that fly through the air at hundreds of miles an hour, and who are building locomotives that speed almost a quarter as fast as that.

It is they who create useful fabrics which a few years ago were wholly unknown, but which now have become necessities to the practice of many of the modern arts.

Many of these pioneers are physicians and surgeons, who by their skill can save lives which a few years ago would certainly have been lost, and who can restore to strength and activity victims of injuries whose cases would in 1920 have been given up as hopeless.

Every year colleges and technical schools are turning out men who will become pioneers in industry of all kinds, and whose labors may work revolutions in many directions.

There will come a time, I am convinced, when these men will, by complete utilization of the water powers of the country, do away with coal as fuel—though they may continually utilize the coal for dyes and other products needed by chemistry.

Elemental gases never known before are widely employed.

Helium, long unknown, now bears dirigibles through the air, and will prove indispensable in time of war.

Here is a pioneering which need not destroy trees or sweep wild creatures out of its way, which has discovered and developed forces heretofore utterly unknown, and which rapidly, by leaps and bounds, is supplying to mankind treasures of the earth never before suspected.

What it may accomplish in the future we today have not even a guess.

But certainly it will carry on its program of research and continue as the days go by to lighten the world's burdens, and to supply man with a leisure which he can employ vastly to his own advantage.

I am beginning to wonder what the people of this country do with the time that they save.

Time and Distance American continent, and if you keep an eye out of the car window you will constantly see signs of men hard at work reducing curves, building tunnels and in other ways shortening the time required to move trains from one place to another.

The streamlined type of train has further decreased the time of travel from coast to coast.

Meanwhile men have become air minded, and the journey from New York to San Francisco or Los Angeles, which used to require months in the old ox cart times can be made in a few hours.

Transcontinental journeys have become a matter of a few days.

But what does the man who, after leaving New York, suddenly finds himself set down across the bay in San Francisco do with the time he has saved?

As a rule, nothing important. He talks to his friends about the amazing speed with which he covered the continent; perhaps he sells a bill of goods, or takes a trip up to the top of Mount Tamalpais.

But has he gained anything by the rapidity of his journey? I doubt it. It seems to me that if we would eliminate all the mad rush to get to places in the least possible time, we would gain much more pleasure and instruction.

I do not think we ought to devote as much time to a transatlantic journey as Columbus did on his, but do believe that if we took time out to look around, and get acquainted with the people we meet in distant sections of the country it would be better for us all.

A child can make a trip to his local town street and back, and get all manner of interest and instruction out of it.

Men and women who travel merely for pleasure have no end of fun.

But it has been my experience in transcontinental travel that most of those who engage in it are far more interested in just "getting there" than they are by what they see and hear on their experience on their way.

I do not advocate the "back to your own back yard" method of spending a lifetime.

But even that is better than dashing madly here and there so that we afterward can brag of the brief time we

Governors of the southern states have been invited to the exercises, along with national and state officers of the United Daughters of the Confederacy. Elaborate plans are being made for a reception to the visitors at Fitzgerald on the evening of June 2. Left to right, Mrs. Humbert Watson, Mrs. W. E. Hale, Mrs. F. E. Lookout Mountain's 2,800-Acre Park Is Opened to Public Chattanooga, Tenn. — To the uncounted Americans who know Lookout Mountain and to the myriads who long to see it, a great work has been done during 1935. The great mountain, rising fifteen hundred feet above the Tennessee River at Chattanooga, is headed to the north in the shape of a huge Indian arrowhead. Its point rests upon what might be the toe of a stupendous Indian moccasin created by a ten-mile majestic curve of the vast Tennessee River, with the city in which and around which and about which soldiers in 1863 hungered during a siege, fought in several decisive battles, and died in appalling numbers.

Few places in all the world afford scenery that is more satisfactory to the sense of sight. Nature in her grander moods nearly always calls for special clothes, long hikes, and various handicaps. Not so on Lookout Mountain. There is a combination of accessibility, grandeur, mildness and visibility that when her Indian and battleground background is added makes the mountain without parallel.

One can with little effort stand on Point Rock, overlooking the sweep of the mighty river—second to none in America in projected water power development—and gaze upon a city of one hundred and twenty thousand people with a remarkable variety of industry. At night the lights of the city are like stars in a gigantic pool. Sightseers may ascend on the famous funicular railway, a cable incline about five thousand feet long, which rises a height equal to one-third of its length as it carries its passengers safely but thrillingly to the top. This railway is unique and not to be soon forgotten. Within sight are two removed battlefields, Chickamauga and Missionary Ridge. Furthermore, tablets erected by the United States tell of other conflicts on the field in immediate view. The names of many valleys, creeks, and rivers, are in the Indian tongue, and monuments to indomitable soldierly courage raise their heads in silent testimony on every hand. A thousand feet below Point Rock, a grey stone tower will be seen. To complete the unusual character of nature here one may there be conveyed four hundred feet down an elevator shaft into the secret places of the earth. A waterfall one hundred and twenty-five feet in height is but one of the marvels to be seen under Caverns Castle.

During 1935, however, the last step was taken toward an ageless accomplishment. Adolph S. Ochs, owner of the New York "Times," dreamer of dreams and generous of the generous, acquired during five years over four square miles of the cliffs and slopes of this most unusual mountain. July 1, 1935, it was deeded to the United States and today a park of two thousand eight hundred acres is open to the public. Development is to carry out Ochs' conception of a "hanging gardens" made real by the great terraced bluffs and by sixty-five miles of riding trails the Government is today constructing. Over twenty-five miles of these have been finished. One meanders from the base of Point Rock for a mile and a half to the base of Sunset Park. The cathedral-like rocks, the moss, the lichen, the laurel, the arbutus, the pines, are nature's restoratives. From unforgettable Sunset Rock one goes southward along a path that in many places literally leads through literal hanging gardens, cliffs rise a hundred feet above us or fall below. Babylon's great "hanging gardens" were not so majestic. Railings are provided. Views are unsurpassed. This trail leads for three and a half miles to the bluffs adjacent to the gorgeous Lookout Mountain Hotel, open during the summer season, where one can look down on a mountain top eighteen-hole golf course and in a few minutes pass into the remarkable and unmatched Rock City Gardens. This Lookout Mountain Hotel seems to be the "top of the world" and is the cynosure of all eyes from Southern approaches to Chattanooga.

First was the grim battle of Chickamauga. Here over one hundred and twenty thousand troops battled for two days, and the percentage of losses was heavier than in any other battle of the Civil War, according to your encyclopedia. This was followed by the siege of Chattanooga, the battle of Wauhatchie, Lookout Mountain, Chattanooga, and Missionary Ridge. The United States made the environs of Lookout Mountain a great government park, marked with tablets so that the battles can be followed in detail. The great Ochs "hanging gardens" are and will be a never-ending source of restoration and delight. On the western slopes of the mountain no fewer than three trails are one-half-way down the slope and one near the base, and more are yet building. The variety of the wild flower and natural shrubbery growth is a subject for a horticulturist.

Lesson for May 24

BUILDING FOR THE FUTURE

LESSON TEXT — Luke 20:45-47;
21:1-36.

GOLDEN TEXT—In your patience possess ye your souls.—Luke 21:19.
PRIMARY TOPIC — A Gift That Pleased Jesus.

JUNIOR TOPIC—What Makes a Gift Great?
INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Making the Most of Today.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Living for Spiritual Ends.

While this lesson is indicated as the quarterly Temperance lesson, and the various subjects suggested vary in their objective, a more logical theme would seem to be "Jesus Teaches in the Temple." No individual, city, or nation can truly build for the future that disregards what the Bible says about the future.

I. Jesus Warns Against the Scribes (vv. 45-47).

He had just dealt with the disbelief of the Sadducees. The scribes claimed faith, for they were the teachers of the law. They were punctiliously exacting as to its literal observance. They had little understanding of the need of flexibility in applying its principles to human needs. They discovered that Jesus was teaching things contrary to their interpretations. Jesus taught that the law was made for man, and not man for the law. The scribes were publicity seekers, making parade of their wisdom. Sunday school teachers should earnestly pray that they may serve as true messengers of Christ, not as scribes with only a head-knowledge of biblical matters.

II. Jesus Makes Estimate of Gifts (Luke 21:1-4).

1. Amount counts for little (v. 1). While the rich cast their gifts into the treasury, and observers may have noted that the clatter of their coins indicated large giving, it is not likely that these gifts meant personal sacrifice or self-denial.

2. Inner conditions determine the value of a gift (vv. 2, 3). In the sight of man the poor widow's deed was not worthy of notice. In the sight of God it merited the immortality of the Bible record. The two-mite gift of the widow revealed her love for God, else how could she spare her all? It revealed her faith in God for tomorrow, for how else would she be fed? It revealed her humility, for she did not withhold her gift because it was so little. Verse 4 is indeed revealing as to Christ's interpretation of the deeper meaning of gifts, for that and the present age.

III. Jesus Prophecies His Return (vv. 5-33).

1. The temple to be destroyed (vv. 5, 6). The temple was the pride and boast of the proud Jew. Such boasting called forth the Lord's declaration that "there shall not be left one stone upon another," a fact that had its fulfillment A. D. 70, when Titus destroyed Jerusalem.

2. The disciples' inquiry (v. 7). There can be no surprise that the disciples should ask for more information about future events. A corresponding verse in Matthew (24:3) should be considered.

3. (An order of events was presented to them (vv. 8-24). Perhaps one would not so much say an order, as that he pointed out details on the great canvas of the future.

a. False Christs would appear (v. 8), some claiming to be the Messiah in his first appearing, and some in his reappearing. These make their appeal to such as are not rooted and grounded in the faith. "Go ye not after them."

b. Inevitable wars and commotions (vv. 9, 10) will embroil the nations. "Commotions" signifies tumults, in the absence of war, wrangling within national life, or between nations. The restful follower of Christ is to "be not terrified."

c. Violent persecutions were foretold (vv. 12-19). The believer of today should absorb the meaning and teaching of this marvelous passage of Scripture. "Settle in in your hearts" that Christ will be to his own even as to the tempest-tossed disciples on Gallilee, when he said "Peace, be still." And in this connection he spoke the words of the golden text, "In your patience possess ye your souls."

IV. Appropriate Warnings (vv. 34-36).

The grosser sins may not ensnare the believer, but how subtle are the cares of this life. But upon the drunken, the obscene, the frivolous, and upon the follower of Christ alike shall trials and perplexities come. Watch ye therefore, always; pray, always. Only so shall the child of God be ready ("worthy") to escape, and to stand before the Son of God. Benediction is pronounced upon "those who love his appearing."

Christian Worship

All Christian worship is a witness of the resurrection of him who liveth for ever and ever. Because he lives, "now abideth faith, hope, charity."

Divided Skirt and Shorts Combination That Equips the Young Lady for Sports

PATTERN NO. 1875-B

You know yourself that half the enjoyment of any sport is spoiled if you aren't correctly dressed, and really there's no excuse for not being equipped for any active sport when a model such as illustrated is so easy and inexpensive to make.

The divided skirt is suitable for golf, tennis, bicycling, riding and hiking. It assures plenty of room and comfort, buttons on the side and supports the most youthful blouse. Note the sports pocket, Peter Pan collar, raglan sleeve and dainty feminine bow.

Instead of the divided skirt, you may have shorts if you prefer, for the pattern is perforated at just the proper length. Notice the small sketch.

Barbara Bell Pattern No. 1875-B is available in sizes 12, 14, 16, 18 and 20.

In Idleness

"IN IDLENESS alone is there perpetual despair," declared Carlyle, who knew well what depression and melancholy were, but met them by hard work. The more intensely we throw ourselves into each day's labors, the more we escape from discouragement and temptation. Work is the sheet anchor of the soul, and the higher work becomes, the higher its satisfaction. Work even for ourselves helps us out of depression; work for others brings joys; work for God lifts us into the most enduring happiness of all.

20. Corresponding bust measurements 30, 32, 34, 36 and 38. Size 16 (34) requires 4 1/4 yards of 35 inch fabric. For shorts only, 3 1/2 yards is required. Send 15 cents for the pattern.

Send your order to The Sewing Circle Pattern Dept., 367 W. Adams St., Chicago, IN.

All Around the House

Make sandwiches for the children's lunch box by shaving maple sugar, mixing with butter and spreading between two slices of wholewheat bread.

Two thicknesses of heavy brown paper are much better than a cloth to use when pressing. Sprinkle paper with water and iron until dry. Newspapers may be used instead of brown paper.

Melted butter is a good substitute for olive oil in salad dressing.

Yellow cream cheese spread on buttered wafers and browned in a moderate oven makes a very good accompaniment, to serve with appetizers, soups or salads.

When making small buns or cakes, flour the tins well instead of greasing them. This plan is much less expensive and the cakes never stick to the tin.

An electric fan will help to dry paint as well as banish odor from a room that has been newly painted.

If a pan of salt is placed under the shelf on which cake is baked the cake will not burn.

The bottom crust of a blueberry pie will not soak the berry juice if after the plate has been lined with paste it is brushed over with a beaten egg and allowed to stand for a few minutes before putting in fruit.

Hot peach juice to which a few drops of lemon juice has been added makes a quickly prepared sauce to serve with cottage pudding.

To slip rose bushes bend branches down, make a deep cut into branch and cover wounded portion with soil. Keep branch down with a large stone.

Peat keeps soil around azaleas cool, moist and porous during the hottest days in summer.

Holland Tunnel Engineers

Didn't Consider Esmeralda

Perhaps it was due to an oversight by the engineers who designed the Holland tunnel, under the Hudson river in New York city, but at any rate Esmeralda, a circus giraffe, just couldn't be squeezed through recently. Esmeralda was on a truck and the driver realized the grave danger of decapitation just in time.

Someone suggested slipping Esmeralda in sideways, but the truck wasn't large enough to hold her length. The problem was heatedly debated for some time. Finally the George Washington bridge was suggested and tried, and Esmeralda arrived safely at the circus grounds.

Now What Excuse Does Prof Suppose Senior Will Use?

The reason he didn't have his theme, explained Fred Lemmer, University of Minnesota senior, was because his typewriter broke down. There had been other alibis, recalled Fred, Edward Weaver. "The next time," he supposed, "I suppose you'll tell me your house burned down." Without his house burned down, Lemmer said: "Sorry, professor. My house burned down." It did, too, friends affirmed.

SYNOPSIS

Lella Seton, young and beautiful and an expert on paintings, is commissioned to go over the collection of paintings in the home of the wealthy Kellers in New York, where a party is in progress. From her window she witnesses a man in another room strike a woman. Shortly after Mrs. Keller sends up word, asking her to join the party at dinner. Lella hastily dresses and goes down. She is seated between Mr. Deck, a critic, and Monty Mitchell, a noted lawyer.

CHAPTER I—Continued

Mr. Mitchell relayed the explanation. "He's gone up to see how his wife's headache is—she didn't come down."

"I know," I said, though I didn't know at all. "That's why I didn't come down—I'd have made thirteen."

It is important that I remember the dinner in the right intervals; at least, it was only a very few moments when Mr. Harriden came back. He said, quite loudly: "I think she's sleeping—the room was dark so I didn't disturb her." And I recall that Alan Deck looked down toward him intently, as if observing him a moment.

I wondered if Deck were interested in Nora Harriden. If she had been the lady he was expecting in the gallery, and if he was waiting now for news, to know if there was any chance for him that evening. After that I gathered courage and addressed him; and he talked quite amusingly, with his suggestion of a drawl, of a new book; but all the time I had a feeling that he was only playing off the top of his mind, and the under part of it was deeply brooding on some inner matter.

Suddenly I said: "What does Mrs. Harriden look like?"

Then I had his attention. He looked at me as if asking what I meant by that. "You've never seen her?" he said slowly.

"Not unless I saw her coming in. . . . There was one lovely woman in gold pajamas I saw—with dark eyes."

"Yes, that was Nora," he said. Then, for the second time, a man left the table; and this time it was Alan Deck. He looked at his wrist-watch, exclaimed sharply, and loudly, "Jove, I've got to put in a call!" and with another word to his hostess, took himself off. He was gone longer than Mr. Harriden had been gone. Perhaps it only seemed so to me—but others thought so too, afterwards. I know that when he was away, there was a queer constraint about that table. The talk went on, but as if it were forced; and I thought that people were watching Mr. Harriden furtively—were they thinking, as I was, that Alan Deck had gone up for the chance of a few words alone with Nora Harriden?

Of course I might be wrong; it might not be Mrs. Harriden in whom he was interested; but looking about that table, I did not see who else it could be. I got the chatty Mr. Mitchell to tell me who the others were.

There were six of us women: Mrs. Keller and her sister, Mrs. Crane, too old, I thought, for Alan Deck; and there was Miss Van Alstyne, who might be the one, but who did not seem to click, somehow; and there was a red-haired little piece, Mrs. Watkins, who was on her second honeymoon, I learned—that seemed too soon for another interest.

That made four, and I was five; and the Princess Rancini was the sixth; and though the princess was lovely in a statuesque way, what Mitchell confided of her exaggerated jealousy of the prince did not indicate much time left over for personal distractions with a young critic. Still, one never knew. . . . If not Mrs. Harriden, it was either the Princess Rancini or Miss Van Alstyne.

I had a strong feeling that people about that table were only making conversation till Alan Deck came back. I had begun to wonder if he were ever coming, when he entered, said something about the rotten service and sat down.

Almost immediately, as if aware that his conduct had given rise to unwelcome speculation, he began to talk to me.

"Did you see the pictures?" he wanted to know.

"You forgot—I left them to you," I reminded him.

"Ah—so you did. . . . You didn't return?"

"No, I'll see them in the morning." Then, suddenly, he said an astounding thing:

"I say—I want you to do something for me. Will you? After this infernal meal is over, slip up and see Nora Harriden—will you?"

I demurred: "I don't know Mrs. . . . Tell her you come from me," he said decisively. "Tell her to take no steps. . . . Remember that. Take no steps till I've seen her. Say I've thought it over. . . . To take no steps."

"But she'll think—I began weakly. 'I've got to reach her,' I said; and somehow his voice affected me deeply, it was so desperate, so urgent. 'I can't trust a servant. I can't write. She doesn't answer her room phone. . . . I beg you—'

"Of course I will," I said quickly. My sympathy for him was an unreasonable thing. At the same time I felt a queer pang—it was Nora Harriden in whom he was interested!

"Don't let the others see you," he warned.

"I'll try not—but which is her room?"

"Second floor—on the front. It's

CHAPTER II

I could hardly wait for that meal to be over. Coffee was in the drawing-room; I let myself be last in the doorway, then turned and hurried up the broad central stairs, turning to the right branch. At the door that had been designated, I knocked softly.

No one answered. There was no sound within the room. Then, feeling an urgent need not to fall in that mission laid upon me, I pushed open the door. The room, illumined by one shaded light, was empty. The bed was ready for the night, the rosy silk coverlets turned down, a gossamer wisp of lace and chiffon laid out.

I looked about. There were doors in plenty behind which she might be; I went to each and spoke. No sound behind them.

I went back and tried another door—the closet, apparently—but that was locked. I supposed she kept sables and ermine there. It didn't matter; she certainly wasn't in a locked closet. Another door, half open, led to the dressing-room and bath, and these were untenantable too.

Feeling like a thief in the night, I came out, and saw Miss Van Alstyne in the hall. We passed, I smiling confusedly, and she with a vague, shallow glance. I hurried downstairs.

Instantly, as if he had been watching, Alan Deck came up, my cup of coffee in his hands.

"She isn't there," I murmured.

"Not there?"

"No. I looked everywhere, bath and all. She simply isn't there."

He stood by me, staring oddly. Then he gave a sort of jerk, and started for the stairs. "Thanks very much," he said as he passed me. . . . I watched him go up; and a queer, hard hostility to Nora Harriden burned in me. He didn't know other women were living.

Now he was looking for her, in some place he had just thought of.

I remember thinking this, while I made a little conversation with Mrs. Crane about the pictures; and then I found myself next to Mr. Harriden. He was a big man, but not stout; he was hard-boned and spare-fleshed. He looked as if he might be merciless.

Then, as the Princess Rancini was moving past us, to the tables being formed for bridge, he caught her quickly by the elbow.

"Paula—run up and see my wife. Will you? I think she ought to see a doctor—she won't for me. You talk her over."

The princess turned on him her lovely face, in which no surprise was apparent.

"She is ill, then?"

"She's cuckoo," said her husband brusquely. "Nerves—she ought to have something quieting."

"But—she was quite all right at tea."

"Was she?" said Harriden grimly. He shed, in his tone of accustomed command: "Run up and see how she is, anyway. See if she won't see a doctor. . . . I'd only stir her up."

The princess smiled, and moved obediently to the staircase.

Suddenly I felt sorry for her husband. He had blurted out his own helplessness so honestly! I could surmise, better than the princess, the reason for that helplessness—that slap in the face he had given her. I imagined Nora would not soon forgive that. And I wondered what it was all about—jealousy, of course; and jealousy, I imagined, of Alan Deck. Harriden had the reputation of being madly in love with his wife, and insanely jealous of her beauty.

Watching the stairs, I felt uneasy till I saw Deck return and go into the drawing-room. Miss Van Alstyne was already down. Then, for a moment, I forgot the Harriden affair in my bother over the bridge-playing.

I was letting myself be apportioned to a table, when the princess entered. Harriden and Mrs. Keller were standing together; she went to them and said something. I heard Harriden's reply:

"Why, that's absurd. Where can she be?"

Mrs. Keller answered something; she sent a man to ask a maid, evidently; for a maid came in for a moment, and denied having seen Mrs. Harriden about the house. Of course, Mrs. Harriden could have come out, without her knowledge.

"You ask the others," Mrs. Keller said, and there was a curious moment of indecision. The wave toward the card-tables was stayed in mid-air. People debated with each other.

"If she had a headache, she might go out."

"Her maid might know if she's put on a dress or wrap for outside," said Mrs. Crane practically.

"She didn't bring her maid—I told her she was a fool," said Harriden.

About the house was a general bustle of running feet and voices; evidently the staff was hurrying from floor to floor. Alan Deck drew near me. "It's odd—I didn't find her, either," he said simply.

Presently, as if by mutual consent, we all drifted up the stairs to Mrs. Harriden's vacant room, as if we could get a clue from eying its bright emptiness.

"It's queer," Harriden kept saying, staring about under frowning brows.

He went on: "She was lying on the bed when I went down—said she had a headache. She had certainly had a crisis des nerfs. . . . When I came up, during dinner, I opened the door, not the hall door, but the one between our rooms, very gently, and her room was dark and still; so I thought she was asleep, and I had better not disturb her. She'd complained so of pain in her head, that I began to worry, and just now I asked Paula to run up."

Mrs. Watkins suddenly raised her rather shrill voice. "You didn't see her, by any chance, when you were up, Alan?"

"No—not a glimpse," he said. "I went to my room for my phone-call."

Suddenly Keller took charge of the rather scattering conjectures. He was a short, stout, energetic man, with a ruddy face, and keen blue eyes. "See here," he said, "this is our house, and Nora seems to have vanished from it. . . . Either she's out about the grounds, walking off her headache, or whatever you had—there was a sudden titter of intimate laughter—for she has cut and run to town. . . . Now let's find out. She couldn't get out of the grounds without going out the gate, and that's locked and she'd have to apply to the lodge-keeper. We'll phone him."

I remembered the high walls, and the forbidding iron gates, that opened for me that afternoon.

But the lodge-keeper, being phoned to, stated that no one had applied, either for admission or departure.

"That settles that—she hasn't gone to town."

"But there are boats," I went on. Harriden gave a bark of laughter. "See Nora running a launch! Or paddling a skiff!"

"The boatman lives over the boat-house there," said Keller. "We'll phone him."

But the boatman said he hadn't seen any one. And he reported all the boats present.

"Have you any theory, Dan?" Mrs. Keller demanded.

He appeared to hesitate. He gave a quick look at all our curious faces clustered about, and I suddenly felt sorry for him. It was indecent, this public exposure of the man's secret wretchedness.

"We'd had a row," he said slowly, as if the words were dragged from him. "She—she was hysterical. She—she threatened a good many things if I—well, never mind. . . . Anyway, after I'd found her sleeping, I began to be afraid of an overdose of some sleeping-stuff—just dramatics, you know; but anyway—I asked Paula to go up. I was uneasy, somehow."

Slowly, he added: "She's been like this before. But this was a bit worse."

"Well, there's no good talking here," Keller told us. "Nora is probably out walking off a headache down one of the paths. We'd better start out and find her—since there'll be no peace till she's found. I'll get the men started." He went to the room phone.

Mrs. Keller said slowly: "If we knew what she had on—Had she undressed, Dan?"

He hesitated. "No, I don't think so."

"Aren't you sure? When you came down to dinner, was she in negligee?"

"I don't think she had changed."

"She was in those gold pajamas? Well, she can't have gone walking in them, can she?" Mrs. Keller moved toward the dressing-room. "Call Anson, and see if she picked them up," she directed her husband.

Anson, the pretty maid who had been summoned downstairs, appeared promptly—and reported that the room had been dark and empty when she came in to open the bed. She said that it looked as if some one had been lying on the bed without taking the covers off. But Mrs. Harriden was not anywhere about, and there were no gold pajamas.

"She's quite capable of walking out in them under a coat," said Mrs. Crane dryly.

"Perhaps they are in the closet," Mrs. Watkins suggested, and Mrs. Keller moved to the closet door.

"That's odd," said Mrs. Keller, shaking the knob.

"Nora usually locks her jewelry up," said Harriden. "—when her maid isn't here to do it for her. I doubt if the pajamas are there. She wouldn't hang them up. They'd be in the dressing-room."

"Well, we can have it opened, and see. Call the housekeeper, Anson."

"Why bother?" said Harriden gruffly. "We're wasting time. We ought to be out in the grounds."

"At least if she's still in the pajamas, she isn't on her way to town," said Mrs. Keller; and as the housekeeper appeared with her pass-key, she took it from her and turned the lock.

Harriden, for all his disbelief of the pajamas being put up there, was quick to step inside, as the lights sprang on, as if he wanted no hand but his. I thought a little sentimentally, to handle his wife's things.

"They certainly aren't here," he said, his voice muffled by the closet. "Nothing but coats and dresses." He added: "Her gold slippers aren't here, either."

"She may be hiding somewhere, to be dramatic," Harriden said gruffly. I thought how the words must hurt him. "We'd better go through the house more thoroughly, and then the grounds."

So people were detailed to go over the house, with guards on the stairs so that each floor, as it was searched, might be kept from reentry.

I thought then that I had really the solution—that the Harridens had quarreled over Alan, and that she was hiding out, in some neurotic extravagance, to spite her husband for his blow.

He certainly admitted that they had had a row, and that she was wrought up and wanted to pay him off.

No one was discovered in the house. "She's either gone away—or been abducted," Mrs. Keller summed up in her decisive way. "There are plenty of bandits who might abduct Nora—and hold her for ransom; but the house certainly hasn't been entered. I myself saw that the window was shut and locked when we went into the room."

"Anson might have shut and locked it afterward," Mr. Watkins suggested. "Was the window open, Dan, when you went down?" Mrs. Keller wanted to know.

"I don't remember—think not."

Then Mr. Keller put the question I had been dreading:

"And no one was in the room after that?"

There was a moment's wait. I kept a guilty silence. How could I explain my intrusion there, without betraying the odd trust that Alan Deck had put in me?

The Princess Rancini spoke up. "I was, you know. I went up when Dan asked me."

"And Anson was, of course. She has told us how she found the room. You didn't notice anything unusual, did you, Anson?" Mrs. Keller broke off to demand of the maid who was hovering on the edge of the group.

The girl hesitated. "Why, no, ma'am. It was just empty; that was all."

"And you didn't see any one about? Earlier in the evening?"

I thought it was with a sort of reluctance that she glanced about at Deck. "I did see Mr. Deck once, going down the hall—he might have been standing outside her door."

Everybody turned to look at him then. His room, as I learned later, was in the left wing on the second floor, so there was no occasion for him to be passing Nora Harriden's door.

He said, very casually: "Oh—I went past on my way to the gallery. I'd left a handkerchief there before dinner, and thought I'd get it while I thought of it."

"And saw Miss Van Alstyne," said the maid. "That was after dinner."

"Yes, I went up to my room," said Miss Van Alstyne. She glanced directly at me, and I felt a horrid premonition: My heart began to hammer.

" weren't you just coming out, when I went by?"

In miserable indecision I hesitated, the blood rushing to my cheeks like flags of guilt. I knew they were wondering how I, of all people among them, I who knew Mrs. Harriden only by name, could possibly have gone to her room when she was reported sleeping off a headache.

I had to speak—to say something. I felt I could not violate my trust, and yet that was a ridiculous scruple in the position I was in. What was Alan Deck to me?

I said slowly: "Yes, I went up. Before the princess did. I wanted to see how she was."

I had a desperate hope that the inquiry might end there, that they might assume I had been sent on the same errand as the princess. But Harriden had caught my words and cried out roughly: "I didn't ask you to! What the devil did you mean entering her room?"

"I don't answer a question like that," I flashed back.

"Oh, yes, you will," he told me; and stung by the insulting overlordship of his tone, I lunged at him: "From your window, before dinner, I had seen you strike her in the face. I knew she was hiding the mark, staying in her room; and since I was the only one who knew it, I thought I could go to something to put on it to cover it."

I had no idea what I was going to say before it was said. For one moment, when I saw his eyes, the sheer next moment they blazed red.

"That's a lie," he said. "I never struck her. What do you mean, saying that?"

King Edward VIII. is now shown in pictures all over the place wearing a classy new silk hat. That's one nice thing for a king—he can wear a new silk hat every day and get photo-

and he remains on his throne. Over here, a politician who has been elewear a silk hat except down in Wash-

his back whenever the picture takers have their cameras trained on him. A silk hat to the sovereign voters on this side of the Atlantic is just like a red rag to a very cross bull, and is only to be tolerated when worn at funerals or the ringmaster
at the circus.

Against the New Deal.

The following was presented to us as the prize winning paper in a contest offered by a midwest newspaper for the article giving the soundest and most logical reasons for opposing the New Deal. We can not vouch for its authenticity.

We are publishing it because of its humorous nature and because it is sure to strike a responsive chord among a great many of our readers.

WHY I'M AGAINST THE NEW DEAL

I am against the New Deal because of:

We Don't Get It.

North Carolina WPA wages are shown to be $23.93 a month, the lowest paid in these United States and less than half of the national average which is $50.03. Next to this state is Mississippi and then comes South Carolina, but why give their figures?

The Insanity Plea.

We get "bet up" every time we head or hear of a criminal who has committed some horrible crime offering an insanity plea to try to get out of his just punishment.

It happens almost every time when the crime is so bad that conviction would bring the death penalty.

We have noticed that these men, who counsel offer the insanity plea after they have committed murder and crimes probably worse sometimes are never considered insane until after they have done something for which the death penalty awaits them. It is very noticeable that these same men have mentalities alert to plot all kinds of schemes to evade the law and to trap their victims and try to get along in this world without making any effort to make an honest living.

If capital punishment is justifiable for sane persons, confinement is logical for insane people who are dangerous. When a sane person's death sentence is commuted to life imprisonment or less than life in incarceration, there is some hope that they ever will be safe in society. Care should be taken to see to it that they are not released on the one pretext or another so as to be permitted to roam at will in society.

There are two outstanding cases before the courts right now of the most heartless and dangerous criminals in the history of the country who are asking for mercy on the insanity plea. One of them is a good example of what happens when mercy is granted to one of his type. He had one death sentence commuted after committing cold blooded murder only to escape from prison and repeat the crime. The other case has not been tried, but the criminal who committed the double crime of rape and murder was on probation at the time his last offense was perpetrated.

And it would seem there was no suggestion at the time the probation was granted that his mentality was impaired to the extent that he was a menace to other people's safety.

The weak point in the law governing convicted criminals of this type is that after they are found "guilty but insane" they are committed to an asylum and subsequently released on the plea that they have fully recovered, reason which may or may not always be true.—Statesville Record.

The Rooster And The Hen.

There is no fault to be found with the 1936 hen. Biddy is reported by the Agricultural Department with increased production of laid eggs four per cent greater than April list of last year.

An observation—suspected to be brain trust, has discovered that a rooster will not crow so early in so early in the morning if the ceiling above him is so low that he cannot stretch his legs, body and neck. The rooster must stretch full length in order to crow lustily.

Has the rooster been investigated in the interests of curtailing the production of eggs? Perish the thought!

"The Hell You Say."

"Big Chief" Farmer of the state patrol is reported as advocating that pedestrians walking along the highways rainy or foggy nights be required to wear white coats. Did any one this side of Hepzadad ever hear of such a foolish suggestion? Why not require the walkers to also carry an electric light, with battery attached, pinned to their rear and keep it constantly lighted?—Ex.

John Paul Jones was the first great American naval hero.

Confession Of A Five Dollar Bill.

I am a Five Dollar Bill. In being Bill is the only resemblance I have to Bryan. But my career has been more checkered. I fancy, than William's. I have seen a great deal, done a great deal, and while I am rather ragged and worn, no matter how dingy I look, I notice that men and women eagerly grab for me and tenderly place me away when they once get hold of me.

What have I done? Great God, don't ask me to tell it all. Don't ask me for the "sad story of my life"—it surpasses belief. I started fresh from the printing press. I was passed to a Congressman from Mississippi, when pay day came, a few days after I had been printed. He passed me over the bar of the Metropolitan hotel for a drink, after he had about fifteen already abroad, and as he laid me on the mahogany he said "there is a new one—give me a little whiskey."

I laid in the money drawer—a cash register that night. In the morning I was taken out and put in a bank. A smooth young man run me through his fingers and the next night I spent in the vault of the vault of the bank, along with many others, but none newer or more crisp than I. The next day I was passed to a man who took me to England. He had me exchanged there for a gold piece, English money, and I remained in England several months doing nothing, but finally got back to New York.

A bright young man took me down to the Bowery one night and passed me to a street walker—it was the first sin I ever committed and I was ashamed of myself, although the bright young man who got some booze along with other things seemed glad enough to let me go. I remained in the Bowery district for about six months. I was passed for whiskey and the souls of women I reveled in sin because sinners were my soul companions. One day I got into the hands of a nice old man's agent. The nice old church member rented houses to the fallen wretches; he got their bad money and took it to church. After the collector had turned me over to the nice man I fell into the contribution box one day. I felt good. It was a great change to get away from the slums; out of the misery and find myself in a contribution box in a fine church where there was music and virtuous and innocent women. The preacher carried me around for some time, and one day he gave me in change to a young man who was being married and wanted to pay the preacher ten dollars and had nothing less than a twenty. I went with the young man and he took me out West. Finally he gave me to a conductor on a dining car and after some little experiences I fell into the treasury of a railroad company. I went through a bank but got in with the railway. From there I kept on going. I noticed that my color had changed. I was wrinkled and torn a little; was greasy and dirty but no matter about that, I was always in demand. Luck was again against me and I was taken by a missionary and found my way to Japan. There I went through banks; got into a nest of wickedness several times; got out; came back to America, and believe me, if you will, I again fell into the Bowery and about lost my life there. I certainly had many experiences. I bought whiskey, I bought the souls of women; I paid the preacher; I paid rent; I was used to gamble with; I bought groceries; I paid the doctor; I paid the preacher one time for a marriage fee; I did all sorts of things, and now I understand I am soon to be returned to the United States treasury and destroyed.

You ask what was the most thrilling thing thing in my life. It was when I was used as the price of a soul—as when I was first eagerly clutched by a fallen woman; a desperate woman because hunger and want had made her desperate, she squeezed me so hard that I really felt pain. She bought opium with me; she bought paint to hide her wretched features in order that she could allure another drunken fiend. Ah, don't ask me to tell it all. I have been equally guilty with those who sinned. But for me many things would have not have happened. I was the happiest when I first went to the Congressman. From that time on I had a terrible time. Some happy days; sometimes extremely happy—but Money sees more pain and misery than it sees of happiness.—Exchange.

Unemployment Figures Abroad.

One of the constant songs of the New Deal orators is that under the present theory of government with its enormous outlays of money and unbalanced budgets—conditions which the New Dealers themselves rarely mention—the country is being returned to great prosperity.

Without going into the question of increased wages and the increased wages and the increased cost of living with the gain in the business of certain great corporation, a gain which has not continued on down to the little fellow, the fact must not be lost sight of that in spite of our so-called prosperity, reliable estimates are to the effect that there are now more than 12,000,000 unemployed in the United States with 20 million people still depends on relief. That is the reason for increased appropriations for relief and the mounting of the national debt with no balancing of the Federal budget in sight.

Aside from this, however, in measuring the extent of our new prosperity for which the New Dealers claim credit, it may be well to compare American conditions with those now apparent in Europe where the progress has been made without resorting to regimentation and lavish expenditure of money to "prime the pump."

Our reduction of unemployment despite the expenditure of ten billion dollars in government relief and experimentation is but 19 per cent, while in Great Britain, where the order of the day has been rigid economy and balanced budgets unemployment in the same three year period has decreased 24 per cent. In Belgium the decrease has been 27 per cent, in Sweden 36 per cent, and in Canada 42 per cent. Critics of the New Deal are pointing also to the recent quarterly report of the International Labor Office of the League of Nations at Geneva which shows that the total number of the unemployed in the United States is 3,000,000 more than the number of unemployed for all Europe although Europe has four times the population of the United States.

There is something in the figures on European recovery, just quoted, which are worth some thinking about. If it cost us ten billion dollars to decrease unemployment 19 per cent in three years with a Brain Trust and other nations reduced the number of the idle all the way from 24 to 42 per cent, without a Brain Trust, how much could we have bettered the situation if deprived of the Federal array of caps and gowns?—Union Republican.

The Record editor is a Republican but he doesn't propose to vote for a liquor man to fill any public office—not if he knows it.

We have been requested to ask all Christian people in this community to suspend card and bridge parties for the next three weeks.

The more the government tries to help the working man and the small farmer the worse shape they are in. Seems that the ones who are benefited most are the ones who don't need help.

Strange how much love these four democratic candidates have for one another. After the primary battle is over, the boys who are defeated will have to eat much crow and swear that it tastes good.

There will be a hot time in North Carolina on Saturday, June 6th. Highway paterollers will put in one full day if they never put in another. Our guess is that they won't be working for McDonald.

Some of the boys who have been at the pie counter in North Carolina for the past five to thirty years, are shaking in their boots, as McDonald has declared he will fire the whole bunch if he is nominated and elected.

Sandy Graham, who spoke here a week or two ago, lost some votes, we verily believe. He made a very good speech, but when he finished a highway pateroller in a bronze Ford, came up with a deputy sheriff from Salisbury and escorted Sandy back to that staid old town. A waste of gas and oil. Sandy knew the way to Salisbury.

Congressman Bacon of New York declared over the radio one night recently that just prior to the Pennsylvania primaries held a few weeks ago, democratic leaders visited all WPA workers and told them they must register and vote democratic or lose their jobs. The Jim Farley postal laws, and our gentlemanly instincts prevent us from commenting on this high procedure.

There are five Republicans in the race for county commissioners in Davie county. L. M. Tutterow and J. Frank Hendrix are candidates to succeed themselves. S. M. Brewer, one of the present commissioners, is not a candidate, as his health has been bad for some time. The new men in the race are O. L. Haakey, of Clarksville, who served one term as commissioner several years ago; G. H. Graham, of Farmington, who, in past years, served two terms as commissioner, and W. T. Myers, of Shady Grove. The three high men in the June primary will be the nominees. For coroner the present incumbent, W. F. McCulloh, is a candidate to succeed himself, and is being opposed by Dr. Garland Green, of Fulton.

Davie county has four men in the race for the legislature, three Republicans and one democrat. Just who will get the nomination for this important office, we have no way of knowing. Boyce Cain, democrat, has no opposition in his own party. The three Republicans in the race are Brewster Grant, R. S. Powell and W. J. Crotts, have some heavy campaigning in front of them during the next couple of weeks. The Record doesn't know just how all of these four gentlemen stand on the sales tax, the liquor question, the absentee ballot law, the auto tag reduction. We are hoping that they will inform the voting public just where they stand on these important questions before the date of the primary.

Mr and Mrs W. R. Smith, of Iredell county, were Mocksville visitors Thursday.

Store Burglarized.

Unknown thieves broke into Martin Brothers store, near the depot some time Thursday night and helped themselves to shoes, ties, shirts, cigarettes and knives. Two rifles were also stolen. Entrance was made by prizing the front door open. The safe and cash register was left open, but the account register was broken open and the contents scattered. About $4 in sales tax money was taken. There is no clue as to who the guilty parties were. The loss is estimated at between $75 and $100.

H. L. Foster Seriously Injured.

Mr. H. L. Foster was seriously injured Friday evening when struck by an automobile while walking across West Front street in front of his residence, in Statesville. A car, driven by Mr. K. A. Morton, manager of the Statesville Paint and Body Company, headed east struck him. Mr. Foster was removed at once to the H. F. Long hospital. There was a fracture of the leg extending to the knee. He also suffered bruises on the head and arms, as indicated by the examination. Mr. Foster is 69 years of age, and is a brother of Mrs. W. L. Call, of Mocksville.

Colored Child Is Badly Hurt.

Billy Meacham, six-year-old colored boy, was seriously injured Friday afternoon about 7:30 o'clock when struck by an automobile driven by J. H. Thompson of Mocksville, on the Lincoln road, nine miles from Salisbury and in front of the child's home. State patrolman W. S. McKinney, who investigated the accident, stated this morning that it appeared the child ran from the yard directly into the path of the car. Both legs were broken and other injuries sustained. The boy was taken to the Rowan General hospital by Mr. Thompson, where his condition is said to be serious. Mr. Thompson was placed under $500 bond pending further investigation.—Salisbury Post.

At this time Miss Euzella Smart, the Director of Women's Activities in the Sixth District, will be present. Miss Smart will discuss the possibility of a Public Library Project for Davie. At a meeting in Statesville on last Thursday the Gen. Sup. of Davie was told that the Project could be had if the community and county did their part. Their part is first of all interest and cooperation. The next thing is donation of books new or old, if we get this project, old books will be reconditioned and put in such good order that they will look like new. And then too of course, voluntary cash contributions. Come to this meeting, and show that we have the first essentials. Bring every book that you can or will donate, and show the second essential. Cana Home Demonstration Club Meets.

The May meeting of Cana Home Demonstration Club was held in the Cana School House with twenty-one members present. The president Mrs. Everette Etchison presided over the meeting in the absence of the secretary Mrs. Era Atkinson. The minutes and roll call was omitted.

Miss Florence Mackie, Home Agent, conducted a splendid lecture demonstration on "milk" the assigned food study for the month. She was assisted by Mrs. Herman Brewer and Mrs. Duke Pope in give the demonstration. In Miss Mackie's talk on the value of milk in the diet she said milk in some form should be the rule in every household because it furnishes more kinds of nutrients than any other one food. It has protein for muscles. Milk, sugar and fat for energy, calcium and phosphorus for sound teeth and bones, some iron for blood, and vitamins for growth and health.

Milk cheese and egg dishes she said require a low cooking temperature (below the boiling point) and also a short cooking period. High temperature hardens and toughens protein, for example egg white when cooked at a high temperature is make very tough and leathery and unfit for human digestion. For cooking eggs, our home agent recommended that they be dropped in boiling water, covered removed from the fire and allowed to remain in the water seven minutes for soft boil, and thirty minutes for hard boil. When cooked in this way the protein part of the egg, which is the white, is very tender and easily digested. Following the demonstration, Miss Helen Brewer Home Beautification leader, read an article on "Pictures in the Home" which was illustrated by the Home Agent as read.

P. O. S. of A. News.

The annual state convention P. O. S. of A. held a great meeting in Concord and Davie county had a very busy delegation during the entire session. Rev. F. E. Howard of Advance, was chairman of constitution and officers committee. Also G. H. Spry was on this committee. Mr. Howard did a fine work for P. O. S. of A., taking the floor several times for the works of this committee defeating the arguments of J. C. Keeler and H. H. Koonitz.

The climax of the convention seemed to be to entertain Bob Doughton and a host of his Political Wiseacres. About 300 prominent Concord and Charlotte civic and business men with the 200 delegates were at the banquet. At the noon recess on Friday a motorcade were shown through Stonewall Jackson Training School where the 473 Boy Scouts put a few maneuvers and flag raisings for the delegates, after which all the boys were seated and given a fine treat to candy bought by the state camp. A fine entertainment of tap and toe dancing was furnished by Camilla School. The election of officers showed the delegates in a mood to change and scatter them over the state. When the finals were over the state officers were as follows: President, W. R. Flemming of Vance county; Vice Pres., H. A. Styers, of Davidson; Master Forms, Leroy Silver, of McDowell; conductor, S. A. Perry, Cabarrus; Inspector, W. B. Caldwell, of Gaston; Guard, M. F. Charles, of Forsyth; F. B. A. Director, J. F. Graham, of Cleveland; Public Relations, C. B. Hoover, of Davie. Keeler and Sink were re-elected as Secretary and Treasurer. H. G. Mitchell was there and was doing like he always does, running about two hours late.

G. M. Spry, C. N. Spry, J. W. Turner and B. C. Brock were guests of Davie delegation at the state meeting.

Republican Candidate for House of Representatives.

I favor checking of trend toward centralization of Power in Raleigh and restoration to the people the right of Self Government, to which they are entitled under a Democracy.

I favor a reduction in State employees under the present system; with more pay for some and less pay for others that we do employ.

I favor all laws being made and ratified by the House and Senate; and not by boards as some are being made now.

I favor laws holding the Highway Commission responsible for damage to property along the highways, and forcing them to pay for same.

I favor the absolute abolishment of the State Highway Patrol under the present system; and a reorganization that is more fair and honest to the public.

I favor a cut of fifty per cent on all automobile License; also the same cut on all private owned trucks with no for hire License for any except those engaged in regular transportation.

I favor enforcement of the Prohibition laws of North Carolina absolutely.

I favor Election laws to prohibit absentee voting by any one in any county in the State of North Carolina.

I am opposed to the present sales tax system, and favor getting the tax to run the state government from those who are able to pay it.

I may not be able to see all the voters personally, but will appreciate your vote on Saturday, June 6th.

TREASURY TOMB

Where Tutankhamun's Tomb was found. Prepared by the National Geographic Society. Washington, D. C.—WNU. The TOMB thought to have been in the solid rock of the desert, it was recently discovered 10 miles south of Luxor. Apparently robbed by thieves who cut through slabs of stone guarding the entrance, it still contained a treasure, and some symmetrical objects probably put there for the soul of the dead person. It was believed to have been a nobleman's "safe-crackers" have found an ancient Egyptian tomb. They had a system all their own. The men who dug the chambers for the prepared the sarcophagi for mummies sometimes tunnelled the site. Thus they were able to break through the floor and the sarcophagus and so the mummy and its jewels. The surfaces of the royal sepulchre are no hint that the body was taken away. A tomb that survived 33 centuries was that of the pharaoh, hewn in the limestone of Luxor, Egypt. When opened in February, 1923, it revealed the king's mummy, sarcophagi, coffins, and numerous articles of importance. It is unlikely that the tomb itself will have a passing interest; but the treasure and valuable furniture, and the hiding place of Tutankhamun's body, which was packed contained such treasures from the past as have been seen by modern man.

Statues of the King of Egypt, each other across the inner chamber. The life-size figures of the king, seen stiff by the artist and less in its vain attempt to show the king's mummy, a mace in the royal staff in the other, with guard below the hand. These of these statues which were the dark, almost black, which distinguishes the mummy from the female in Egypt. The headresses, collars, wristbands, maces, and sandals and the sandals were of Onyx and gold. The mummy's face was of gold. The head and eyebrows were of gold. The head and eyebrows were of gold. In the antechamber with the king's large funeral bouquet. The king's mummy was in a large coffin, and a casket whose lid bore paintings depicting the king's life. The contents consisted of the king's raiment. Most of the mummy was badly crumpled and the fabrics had almost perished. Well preserved, however, were a golden headband found on a mummy, and a golden scarab, which was wrought in silver and gold with carnelian, lapis lazuli and turquoise glass, the design being the king's name. The scarab, a member of the beetle family, was mummy in ancient Egypt, being the sun-god.

In the tomb were alabaster and unguents. Thous of King Tutankhamun's mummy, the unguents retained their color and became viscous in some of the objects found in the tomb which Tutankhamun had in the afterworld. TREASURES IN TOMBS

Where Tutankhamen's Tomb Was Found.

Prepared by the National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.—WNU Service.

A TOMB thought to have been cut in the solid rock over 7,000 years ago was recently discovered 10 miles south of Cairo, Egypt. Apparently robbed centuries ago by thieves who cut through two large slabs of stone guarding the entrance, it still contained a bundle of mummies and some symmetrical jars, bowls, and some small objects, probably put there for the benefit of the dead person, who is believed to have been a nobleman. Modern "safe-crackers" have nothing on ancient Egyptian tomb robbers. They had a system all their own. At the very men who dug the unexplored chambers for the dead and sometimes tunneled under the site. They were ready to break through the floor and the base of the sarcophagus and so withdraw the mummy and its jewels. The upper surfaces of the royal sepulcher would give no hint that the body had been seen away.

A tomb that survived 33 centuries of robberies was that of Tutankhamen, hewn in the limestone cliffs near Luxor, Egypt. When officially opened in February, 1923, it still contained the king's mummy, sarcophagus, coffins, and numerous art objects. The antechamber alone contained 167 objects of importance. It is unlikely that the comparatively small tomb itself will have more than passing interest, but the rich store of rare and valuable furniture with its hidden place of Tutankhamen's packed contained such wonders from the distant past as have seldom been seen by modern man.

Statues of the King. Facing each other across the entrance to the inner chamber were two life-size figures of the king, each taken still by the artist and standing in its vain attempt to guard the royal tomb: a mace in one hand, a long staff in the other, with a palm-branch guard below the hand. The portions of these statues which represent the skin were the dark, almost black, color which distinguishes the male figure from the female in Egyptian art. The headresses, collarets, armlets, bracelets, naces, and staffs were gilded and the sandals were of gold. On each forehead was the royal cobra inlaid bronze and gold. The eye sockets and eyebrows were of gold, the details of aragonite, and pupils of obsidian.

In the antechamber with the statues were a large funeral bouquet, a linen chest filled with the king's undergarments, and a casket whose vaulted lid bore paintings depicting lion hunts. The sides of the latter were decorated with paintings showing the king in battle against African and Asiatic enemies. The contents consisted of the king's garments. Most of the paraphernalia was badly crumpled and the fine fabrics had almost perished.

Well preserved, however, was a leopard-head buckle found on one of the king's shoes, and a golden scarab buckle. The scarab, a member of the scarab beetle family, was much venerated in ancient Egypt, being sacred to the sun-god.

In the tomb were alabaster vases filled with unguents. Though in the tomb of King Tutankhamen for 3,300 years, the unguents retained their perfume and became viscous in the sun. Some of the objects found in the tomb which Tutankhamen wished to take to the afterworld included a stool, a solid ebony inlaid with ivory and mounted with gold. The feet of the stool represented ducks' heads, and the seat was inlaid to represent an animal skin. The king's throne was covered with gold and silver and inlaid with semi-precious stones. Upon the back of the throne was a tableau representing the king and queen under the Aten (sun), the rays being in basalt. Wheels and parts of four royal chariots were found.

Discovery Was a Sensation. Words cannot give any impression of the decorations of the sarcophagus itself. This great box appeared to be made of wood, covered with gold leaf or beaten gold, which was quite bright and had across it a fine frieze in lapis lazuli or faience enamel. It appeared to an observer to be about nine feet high, and about eighteen or twenty feet long.

The discovery of Tutankhamen's tomb was world news. Thousands of columns of newspaper space were devoted to it in every country. Never before in history had an archeological discovery so captured popular interest. The art objects had been removed and protected, the tomb with its sarcophagus and mummy was opened for visits by the public. Probably 100,000 visitors in all had entered the tomb by January, 1934.

Business men throughout the world pleaded for the right to use these 3,300-year-old designs for gloves, sandals, jewelry, and textiles. One American silk manufacturer established a scholarship for study of the designs.

The incomparable treasures from Tutankhamen's tomb, whose salvage required years of arduous work, were exhibited in the Egyptian museum at Cairo, where they occupied several galleries in the crowded show house founded by Mariette Pasha.

The official opening of the inner chamber of Tutankhamen's tomb was on February 18, 1923. The queen of the Belgians was the honor guest. A staff correspondent of the National Geographic Society describes the event.

On February 17, he arrived in Luxor, crossed the river and started on foot for the Tombs of the Kings. Plodding along on foot he exchanged Arabic salutations with the white-toothed village girls, felt the African sun on his back, and watched the camels stalk by on their way to the cane fields.

On the Way to the Tomb.

The morning freshness was still in the air. Gangs of prisoners were grading and watering the road which Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth of Belgium would use on the morrow, when she came to pay the first royal visit to Tutankhamen in more than thirty centuries. But the correspondent did not keep to the winding way, made smooth for automobiles, which glide like a chalk-white serpent between the tawny hills. Beyond the green fields he saw the Colossi of Memnon and made for them. He wanted to pass the many lesser gaping tomb-mouths before he finally came to the royal tombs behind the limestone ridge.

As the correspondent passed through a mud-walled village, with its narrow alleys almost black under that hot light which lacks reflective power, a girl of ten or so stopped stripping sugar cane with her gleaming teeth to wish that his day be blessed and to offer to share her store.

The noonday sun was hot and getting hotter. He shouldered his heavy camera and started up the steep path. Thus should one approach that hell-hole in the hills where the greatest of Pharaohs hid themselves and where not more than two or three still lie undisturbed by modern man. As he passed the tomb of Seti I and turned toward the lower entrance of the valley, he saw below him a small white tent, a wooden shelter for the armed guard, the clutter of lumber which archeologists use, and the new wall of irregular stones which hid the entrance of Tutankhamen's mausoleum. This superheated graveyard, which was to become a picnic ground and levee for royalty on the morrow, was a silent place. Correspondents waiting about for news spoke in whispers, as though the secrets of the spot would be violated by loud talk.

Official Opening of a Spectacle.

Early the next day the correspondent rode out again to the scene. The stage was all set for the big event of the day, the official opening. As the day grew hot, small companies of visitors arrived; but there had been no attempt to make this a popular holiday and the crowd never numbered more than 200.

About noon there arrived a squad of camels laden with food and drink for the distinguished guests. The last of them seemed to be sweating from the heat, an unusual phenomenon, made plain when one noticed that his load was ice in gunny sacks.

None of this feast was eaten by the guests, for the train which brought Her Majesty and Lord and Lady Allenby to Luxor was so late that lunching-out there in the graveyard of royalty was not to be thought of. Those who had come early had already eaten their lunches in the tunnel leading to the tomb of Amenemese, as one eats in a railway lunchroom, with one eye on the clock and the other on the door. The age-old walls of stone echoed the rattle of the portable typewriter operated by a press reporter.

Then came Lord Allenby in his motor-car, to wait near the barrier to the tomb.

A motor rolled up; a white-clad figure alighted; there were numerous introductions, especially to those Egyptian officials present, and the queen, with Mr. Carter leading the way, with Lord Carnarvon on her left and with Lord Carnarvon's daughter just behind, went down the incline that led to the tomb mouth. Within a moment Her Majesty had entered the shadowy portal of Tutankhamen's tomb.

Sunlight Beats Strongest on Tops of High Mountains

Sunlight beats most strongly at the tops of high mountains, where hardy climbers find it impossible to get warm.

This paradox of solar physics was brought down from the heights of the Andes by an exploring party of the Smithsonian Institution headed by C. P. Butler, says Science Service. With instruments packed up steep trails, they found that the sunlight at the top of Mt. Aconcagua, almost 20,000 feet high, was nearly one-sixth greater than at sea level. Yet in the middle of the day the temperature hardly rose above the freezing point.

Six Babies in Three Days
World's Greatest Terror
Another Mild Bad Man
How to Avoid Thought

President Sacasa of Nicaragua commands officially the statement that a very poor woman on the "distant shore of Lake Nicaragua" has given birth to seven babies.

Arthur Brisbane

The mother, Mrs. Sinfonora Martinez, had a difficult time. The births stretched over three days—May 3, 4 and 5. The babies' names are, or were, Jose Jesus, Ramon del Carmen, Maria del Carmen, Socorro del Carmen, Maria de Jesus and Juana Ramona.

The seventh name was not telegraphed, for there was no seventh, as it was expected there would be. Five of the sextuplets are already dead. Only one, a girl, lives.

What would population of the earth be if such births were the rule and all lives?

At the opening of the Catholic press exhibition in Vatican City, Pope Pius, for the second time within two days, cautioned the world against communism, which he called "the great terror which threatens all the world."

For the comfort of those that live in dread of final Communist world conquest, it may be said that thus far nothing opposed to human nature has ever succeeded.

By the arrest in California of Thomas H. Robinson, Jr., kidnaper of Mrs. Stoll, Mr. Hoover and his G-men brought into the shadow of the electric chair the last of the group of dangerous criminals that have recently been wandering about the country.

This "bad man," like others recently gathered in, shook with fright when he found the gun pointed at him, made no effort to fight. When the guns are pointed the wrong way, "bad men" often change to good, meek and scared men.

Stamp collectors have held a celebration, grateful to Doctor Eckener for a new kind of stamp. How many ways man finds to keep busy and at the same time avoid thinking!

Collecting queer things, stamps or tear jugs; playing bridge, working crossword puzzles, playing solitaire, rushing to the far corners of the world to spend money—usually not earned; going to Africa to kill big game animals. Those are some substitutes for thinking and working constructively, the only occupation worthy of a human being.

Mrs. James C. Canipe of Clovis, New Mexico, as a girl was not able to finish high school, but that did not discourage her. She waited some years. Then she joined the senior high school class with her son and daughter-in-law, and will graduate with them this month, among the most brilliant scholars.

Chancellor Hitler, who was never married, nevertheless thinks marriage a good idea. Young Nazis, in the public employ, have been told that unless they marry by the time they are twenty-six years old there is something the matter with their "courage and will power."

A syndicate is formed to seek the "buried gold bags of Alexander the Great," containing at least $300,000,000 in yellow wealth.

Alexander the Great's ghost might be surprised to hear about that. Alexander was too busy to collect gold, and not the kind of man to bury it in a hole.

Encouraged by her father, a sixteen-year-old high school girl walked onto the wing of a small plane, prepared for a first parachute jump, at 1,500 feet. The pilot perceived that the parachute cord had been pulled prematurely; pulled her back into the cockpit in time to save her from death.

Without requiring encouragement, Mrs. Harriet O. Hague, eighty-six years old, flew the ocean on the Hindenburg return trip. Tell that to your friend who used to oppose female suffrage "because women are not brave like men."

Germany is building many fleets of small aircraft, and some day this country's automobile men will turn to airplane building; then, those already past sixty may live to see in the air 25,000,000 flying machines, one for every automobile on the ground.

The Italian flag flies over Haile Selassie's palace. He will never see that palace again, but he has boxes of gold bars with him and has moved to a safer, better climate.

The civilized world, whatever its attitude toward the slave-dealing alleged descendants of King Solomon and the Queen of Sheba, must rejoice in Mussolini's proclamation abolishing slavery throughout Ethiopia, where slaves have been the chief cash-producing product.

Borah Loses Ohio Primary—House Defeats Frazier-Lemke Inflation Bill—Tugwell's Report on His Resettlement Administration.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD
© Western Newspaper Union

SENATOR WILLIAM BORAH banked heavily on success in the Ohio Presidential preference primary, but the Republicans of that state turned him down decisively in favor of their "favorite son," Robert A. Taft, son of the late President Taft. Of the 52 delegates to the Cleveland convention, Borah captured only five, the others, including the delegates at large, being Taft men. The winning delegation will be virtually unpledged, because it will vote for Taft only on the first ballot. Mr. Borah did not take this defeat calmly. He gave out a statement in Washington accusing the Republican organization leaders of manipulating the votes of colored citizens against him by promising the passage of federal anti-lynching legislation which he has opposed as unconstitutional. The Idaho senator added:

Senator Borah

"The Republican party will go into the campaign laying great stress upon Constitutional integrity and the preservation of state rights.

"The men who are in control of the party, and who will likely be in control of the convention, will write its platform and name its candidate, have already demonstrated that they care nothing about Constitutional integrity or the preservation of state rights, that their talk on this subject is hypocritical and intellectually dishonest."

Ohio Democrats polled about 500,000 votes in the primary, nearly 100,000 more than the Republicans, and they expressed their preference for Mr. Roosevelt over Col. Henry Breckinridge to the tune of 16 to 1. They also renominated Gov. Martin L. Davey, who will be opposed by John W. Bricker, Republican, in November.

West Virginia also held primaries and there Borah and Roosevelt won easily over nominal opposition. The state's Republican delegation, however, will go to the convention uncommitted. It is interesting to note that one of Ohio's delegates at Cleveland will be Alice Roosevelt Longworth, daughter of "T. R." and a spectator at many previous conventions.

WE ARE not going to have any currency inflation, at least before next session of congress. The Frazier-Lemke farm mortgage refinancing bill, dragged out of committee by a petition signed by 218 house members, and then hotly debated for a day, was defeated by the decisive vote of 235 to 142. The bill called for the printing of three billion dollars for its financing.

The petition signers included 159 Democrats, and before the vote every one of them was told by Pat Boland of Pennsylvania, the party whip, that the President didn't want the measure passed at this time and that if the member voted for the bill it would be just too bad for him. Besides this potent argument the Democratic leaders induced President William Green of the American Federation of Labor to intervene and he called together the federation's executive council and had it write a letter saying it was opposed to the bill because of the inflation feature. This was read to the house by Speaker Byrnes and undoubtedly affected the vote, though some members resented being told what to do by Mr. Green.

There was relief in the White House when it was announced the President would not have to veto such a measure in an election year.

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT was supposed to have abandoned for the present the Florida ship canal and Passamaquoddy tidal power projects for which the house refused to appropriate further funds. But Senator Robinson of Arkansas was called to the White House for a conference and returned to the house to introduce a resolution authorizing the President to appoint engineering boards of review for the two schemes.

The boards would present their findings by June 29, and, if favorable, the President would have authorization to set aside $10,000,000 for the canal and $9,000,000 for Passamaquoddy out of available relief money.

NEWTON D. BAKER and Dean Acheson, counsel, for five powerful companies that are trying to block the government's municipal power program, met with defeat in the District of Columbia Supreme court when they sought to subpoena correspondence between President Roosevelt and Secretary Ickes. Jerome Frank, a New Deal attorney, stated that the President had directed that his "privilege" of testimonial immunity be asserted in the case; and Chief Justice Wheat refused to issue the subpoena.

THE house concerns in senate action, the title of Harold L. Ickes will be changed from secretary of the interior to secretary of conservation. A bill making the change was passed by the senate at the instance of Senator Lewis of Illinois. Two years ago, when Mr. Ickes was at the height of his power, he wanted the title altered to "secretary of conservation and works" and hoped that many of the agencies of the Department of Agriculture would be transferred to his department. But Secretary Wallace objected strenuously, and lately so much has been taken out of Mr. Ickes' hands that Senator Lewis cut his bill to the one paragraph, "making the change of title and leaving off 'and works.'"

WORKS PROGRESS ADMINISTRATION HARRY HOPKINS issued an order to state WPA directors instructing them not to employ armed guards, not to spy on workers and not to blacklist workers who organize.

The order was issued following a conference with Victor F. Ridder, New York city WPA administrator, who employed a detachment of guards to protect his office against anti-WPA demonstrations which Mr. Ridder asserts were stirred up by Communists.

OPPOSITION in the senate finance committee to the corporate profits tax in the administration's $803,000,000 revenue bill was so strong that both Democrats and Republicans sought for some compromise. Treasury officials were heard in favor of the measure as passed by the house, but former treasury officials and various business and industrial leaders speaking in opposition were seemingly more persuasive. Senator Tom Connally of Texas put forward a plan he thought all might agree upon. It would retain the 15 per cent corporation income tax and repeal only the capital stock and excess profits taxes, instead of repealing all corporation taxes as proposed in the house bill. In addition it would superimpose a graduated tax on undistributed earnings, exempting the first 20 per cent on the amount retained. The house bill reaches a maximum of 42 1/2 per cent of the total income if none is distributed.

Senator Byrd of Virginia, another of the Democrats opposed to the house bill, showed, in a letter to Secretary Morgenthau, that 11 of the largest corporations in the country would pay no taxes under the Roosevelt bill.

RESPONDING to a senate resolution, Rexford Tugwell made a report on the activities of the resettlement administration of which he is the head. He showed that it has 15,804 employees on the administration payroll and has been allotted $275,549,944 to spend. Of this amount, the report stated, $38,347,005 has been spent and a total of $173,091,523 obligated, leaving $102,458,112 uncommitted.

R. G. Tugwell Up to April 15, according to the report, the resettlement administration had taken options on 9,670,000 acres of land, of which options on 8,469,000 acres, costing $36,344,000, had become legal commitments. As of May 1, the report said, 59,521 persons, including 3,581 on the CCC payroll, were employed in connection with the land acquisition program.

The report stated that a recent survey indicated that "the purchase of approximately 24,000,000 acres of land would be needed to block in and round out" the existing projects and to establish a minimum number of new projects.

Of 33 subsistence homestead projects, construction has been completed on 18, is in progress on 11 and final plans have been drafted for 4. The report lists four suburban housing projects, financed from a $31,000,000 allocation for this purpose. They are in Berwyn, Md., Bound Brook, N. J., Milwaukee, and Cincinnati.

On rural rehabilitation, the report says the RA has cared for more than 300,000 families. For its rehabilitation advances to individual "clients," the administration will expend $108,000,000 through June 30.

There were more than 71,000 workers employed on projects financed by the organization during April, the report states, adding that the peak is expected to be reached during the summer with 100,000 workers.

CHANCELLOR KURT SCHUSCHNIGG of Austria has long been at odds with the vice chancellor, Prince Ernst von Starhemberg, and now he has got rid of that active young man and is practically the sole dictator of the country. This was accomplished by the resignation of the cabinet and its reconstruction immediately with Von Starhemberg left out. Schuschnigg is not only chancellor but also minister of defense and foreign minister.

Von Starhemberg had antagonized Schuschnigg by insisting on keeping up his own private army, the Heimwehr, and also by his friendliness toward Mussolini and his general Fascist sympathies.

MANUEL AZANA was advanced from the premiership to the presidency of Spain by almost unanimous vote of the 574 electors gathered in the Cortes at Madrid. He succeeds Niceto Alcalá Zamora who was removed from office on a charge of malfeasance after the Leftist victory in the recent elections.

Manuel Azana

Azana, fifty-six years old, is a lawyer, orator and playwright and is regarded as the most astute politician in Spain. To the notification committee he said: "Spain may rest assured that I will be loyal to the principles of democracy and that the welfare of the nation will be my constant concern."

HINDENBURG, the immense dirigible, carrying 107 persons, mail and freight, made the flight from Friedrichshafen to Lakehurst, N. J., in 61 hours and 57 minutes and was welcomed by thousands of Americans, including R. Walton Moore of the State department who brought the greetings and congratulations of President Roosevelt. Three days later the airship started back to her new base at Frankfurt-on-Main. The dirigible was in the command of Capt. Ernst Lehmann, but he received far less attention here than did Dr. Hugo Eckener, the veteran skipper of Zeppelins. Eckener, in bad with the Nazis at home, was permitted to be aboard the ship as an "adviser." He and Captain Lehmann went to Washington together, while the ship was being groomed for the return flight, to call on President Roosevelt and other officials and return their greetings.

On the return flight the Hindenburg traveled swiftly, reaching Frankfurt-on-Main 48 hours and 18 minutes after the departure from Lakehurst.

The Hindenburg is to make ten commercial trans-Atlantic trips this summer.

PARK TRAMMELL, veteran United States senator from Florida and a staunch supporter of all New Deal measures, died in Washington of a cerebral hemorrhage which followed an attack of influenza. Though ill, he tried to remain on the senate floor long enough to vote for a proposal to include $12,000,000 in the War department appropriation bill for continuation of the Florida ship canal. This effort probably cost him his life.

SOME two thousand delegates were present when the annual convention of the American Red Cross was opened in Chicago by Admiral Cary T. Grayson, the national chairman. Speakers at early sessions included Mayor Ed Kelly, and Ralph Christian, schoolboy of Birmingham, Ala., representing the Junior Red Cross. Mrs. Elizabeth H. Vaughan, a nurse of St. Louis, was awarded the Florence Nightingale medal for her long record of nursing service.

Dr. Thomas Farran, Jr., the new surgeon general of the United States public health service, was present and made a speech, and talks were delivered by Robert E. Bondy, director of national disaster relief, and others who directed activities in the flood and storm areas.

SECRETARY ICKES' supporters were easily defeated by the Harry Hopkins forces in the house fight as to whether the Public Works administration should share in the handling of next year's relief funds. But it was understood the feud would be revived in the senate under the leadership of Senator Arthur Capper of Arizona, Democrat and a member of the appropriations committee.

The house majority voted according to the wishes of the administration to the relief bill, which is a $2,364,228,712 measure carrying $1,425,000,000 to finance the Works Progress administration after July 1.

In addition to the relief appropriation, the bill carries $458,631,880 for the social security program, $39,900,000 for the Tennessee Valley Authority, $400,000 for continuing the communications commission's telephone inquiry, and various new and deficiency amounts for other agencies.

The most important amendment permitted to be added to the bill by the house leaders was one submitted by Representative William P. Connery providing that the prevailing wage in communities be paid to WPA workers. Ickes signified his acceptance of defeat in the battle for funds by ordering an immediate cut of 25 per cent in WPA personnel in Washington and throughout the country. This affects 2,000 persons.

MUSTAFA NAHAS PASHA, leader of the Wafd or Nationalist party in Egypt, has become premier and formed a new government in which he holds also the post of minister of the interior. Wafsy Ghall Pasha is his foreign minister and Gen. Ali Fahmy Pasha is minister of war and marine.

Washington Digest National Topics Interpreted by William Bruckart National Press Building Washington, D. C.

Washington—With the national convention of the Republicans only a week away, New Deal strategists are

Seek to Disrupt G. O. P. bending every effort toward a program designed to make a knock-down and drag-out fight of that session. It is not disclosing any secret to say that the New Dealers are using this weapon up to the hilt because disruption of the Republican party would make victory easy for Candidate Roosevelt.

Predictions in politics always are perilous. Governor Alf M. Landon of Kansas seems to be in the lead at this time for the Republican nomination, but there are many observers throughout the country who contend that the "Kansas Coolidge" cannot win, and that various other aspirants for the nomination, men whose hats are in the ring, likewise must be counted out. This is to say that a feeling is growing that a dark horse will be nominated.

From the strictly Washington viewpoint, which may be different than elsewhere in the country, astute political observers are convinced that there must be a swift change in sentiment to keep the nomination away from Governor Landon. Yet, it must be said that politics is fraught with just such things and so it is entirely possible that the Republican nominee may be someone other than the present apparent leader in the race.

Those who feel that Governor Landon will be the nominee claim he has played his cards well. But others insist that the Kansas governor made a bad mistake in allowing his name to be linked with the Hearst faction in California. Indeed, I have heard comment that this fact alone will defeat Governor Landon.

It has been interesting to observe the maneuvers of the New Deal strategists with reference to the New Deal Strategy observers contend that the efforts being put forth from New Deal quarters in an attempt to discredit Governor Landon were being engineered because the New Deal fears Governor Landon as a Roosevelt opponent more than it fears some of the other candidates for the nomination.

Frank R. Kent, the Washington commentator for the Democratic Baltimore Sun, asserted that the New Deal activity against Landon's nomination constituted "the best evidence of the increasing probability" of the Kansas governor's nomination. Mr. Kent did not say that which some other informed writers feel, namely, that the Landon candidacy would mean a bitter campaign on the part of the Roosevelt forces to re-elect the President. Nevertheless, it has been interesting to note the various ways in which Roosevelt spokesmen and Democratic publicity men have been trying to show the country that Governor Landon is not the man who should be nominated.

I have no quarrel with these efforts. It is the game of politics. Virtually anything goes. It is to be assumed that present Republican maneuvers will be concentrated in a few weeks on Mr. Roosevelt personally as the Democratic candidate. In fact, one hears expressions around Washington that for the first time in Mr. Roosevelt's political career, he is going to be directly under fire.

Just in this connection, one can recall that through most of the New Deal administration, criticism of New Deal policies and plans, almost without exception, was directed at Roosevelt appointees. The President himself has been exceptionally free from the type of personal attack that frequently characterizes political opposition. He has had absolutely none of the kind of criticism that occurred in the Hoover administration and was directed at Herbert Hoover, personally.

So, as we look at the campaign picture just ahead of the Republican convention and only a month in advance of the meeting of the Democrats at Philadelphia where President Roosevelt will be renominated, without opposition in his own party, I think it can be said without fear of contradiction that both candidates this year are going to be smeared personally just as fast and as long as the ammunition holds out.

While we are talking about the forthcoming quadrennial conventions, the two keynote speakers naturally enter into any discussion.

Senator Alben Barkley of Kentucky will do the keynoting for the Democrats at Philadelphia and Senator Frederick Steiwer of Oregon will deliver the main address to the Cleveland convention of the Republicans. Senator Barkley was the keynoter at the Chicago convention when Mr. Roosevelt was nominated by the Democrats four years ago and, though it is a subject not freely discussed, it is said in high places that Mr. Roosevelt wanted the same man to do the job again, believing the Kentuckian to be an "old man of good luck."

The selection of Senator Steiwer as one of those things that can be said to be a surprise and yet not a surprise. He is, without doubt, a good man for the job. Yet in some quarters there is a conviction that Senator Steiwer was picked by the so-called "Old Guard" of eastern Republicans. Some observers still hold the belief that the selection of Senator Steiwer was not wholly pleasing to the Landon forces but that as it may, there has been no particular feeling created by it. It represents a piece of strategy by the eastern Republicans who were feeling their problem by remote control. They apparently have played into the hands of the more liberal wing of the Republicans. It is being predicted that the Oregon senator's keynote speech will lean strongly to the liberal side but that it will stress economics.

The best advance information obtainable on Senator Barkley's plans is that he will devote the bulk of his time at the convention platform to a review of Roosevelt's accomplishments in the last four years. He will also make a presentation out of the class of a "defense" speech. Those with whom I have talked concerning the Barkley speech believe he has adopted a more political course; that he feels there is no need to defend anything that has been done and that the record itself is the thing upon which the Democratic party can make a plea for reelection of Mr. Roosevelt.

Having observed Senator Barkley's action in the senate for a number of years, I believe I am justified in saying that he is a square shooter and a fighter. In this respect, he and Senator Steiwer, the Republican keynoter at the convention, are much the same type of man and, therefore, if either convention gets into the wrong foot, the fault will be with the convention managers rather than with the proposals offered by the men who are supposed to lay before the delegates a rough outline of their respective party's campaign policies.

Concerning the record of the last four years in the senate, each stands square. Senator Barkley has consistently battled in behalf of the President and New Deal policies throughout Mr. Roosevelt's administration. Senator Steiwer has been just as consistent in his opposition. Certainly, Senator Steiwer has been much more vocal against New Deal policies than most of his Republican colleagues, and more so than Senator McNary.

For many months Washington has heard the plaint of business leaders who wanted a big birth by New Deal brain trust. We were afraid to do so because of the "tallation." Almost constantly, information has filtered into Washington to the effect that if a corporation violated to oppose New Deal plans vigorously, there was danger that some agency of the government would "crack down" on them. Much of this information has been taken by Washington observers with a grain of salt but a different aspect has been placed on the situation lately.

It was in the senate that a New Deal Democrat, Senator Homer T. Borah of Washington, broke loose with statements that seemed to substantiate the fear voiced so frequently that there was veritable and "cracking down" within the government. In fact, one hears expressions around Washington that for the first time in Mr. Roosevelt's political career, he is going to be directly under fire.

Of course, Senator Borah was attacking this espionage system because of a feeling that it might be used to force members of congress and other executive or administrative officers of the government who were opposed to the plans propagated by President Roosevelt. His thought obviously concerned the political phases of such a system but the fact that he brought the matter to public attention serves as a measure, certainly, to substantiate some of the claims that business leaders have made.

I am unable, however, to remember Senator Borah's position respecting the OGPU which he charged was used to spy within the government and to spy on silence when the obstructive Senate lobby committee, headed by Senator Black, Democrat, of Alabama, opposed in the wholesale seizure of private telegrams. It will be recalled that I reported in these columns how Senator Black and agents of the Federal Communications Commission went into the files of the Western Union Telegraph company and carried off literally thousands of private telegrams. I was convinced then and I repeat it now, that the Black seizure was nothing more than an attempt to dig up dirt on a body against whom they could find no creditable information. Yet, Senator Borah, by his silence, caused the course only to denounce later the terms of so-called "inspector" used by Secretary Ickes of the Department of the Interior and repeatedly by other agencies of the government.

Other agencies of the government can only hope that if Senator Borah's charges are true that the usual course will result, namely, that the matter will be other pieces to spy on these agencies.

"I was miserable," she explains. "I did not have an appetite. I was very blue and upset. I remembered Cardui had helped me, so I took it again and soon began to pick up. I ate and had more strength. SYNOPSIS

Leila Seton, young and beautiful and an expert on paintings, is commissioned to go over the collection of paintings in the home of the wealthy Kellers in New York, where a party is in progress. From her window she witnesses a man in another room strike a woman. Shortly after Mrs. Keller sends up word, asking her to join the party at dinner. Leila hastily dresses and goes down. She is seated between Mr. Deck, a critic, and Monty Mitchell, a noted lawyer. Introductions follow. There are Mr. Harriden, Miss Letty Van Alstyne, Mrs. Crane, Mrs. Watkins and Prince and Princess Rancini, guests. Leila finds she is taking the place of Nora Harriden. Dan Harriden leaves the table, and Mitchell explains he has gone up to see how his wife's headache is. He returns shortly, Deck saying he must put in a call. Leila leaves the table, and she begs Leila to secretly take a message to Nora "to take no steps until I see you." Leila consents. Leila finds the Harriden rooms empty and so informs Deck. Coming out she passes Letty. Harriden asks Princess Rancini to run up and see his wife. The princess reports the absence of Nora. Search is fruitless. Harriden admits that he had a row, and believes she is spitefully hiding. Anson, a maid, reports seeing Deck near Nora's room. Letty tells of seeing Leila come from the room. Leila accuses Harriden of having struck his wife.

I could only stand and stare, gripped in a horrible uncertainty. I could not swear that the figure in the window had been his. But it was in her room, and if not he—

Very stiffly I said: "I certainly saw a man's figure in that room, and saw him strike a woman. The curtains were not drawn, and he was standing in the window."

An odd shiver ran across Harriden's face. It was like a tremor through ice, I thought; and then the hardness and the stiffness reformed. He said, through lips that seemed to be enunciating with painfulness: "I have no means of knowing who was in my wife's room before I came up."

There was a perfectly ghastly silence. I didn't dare look at Alan Deck, though I know I was asking myself if it had been he in that room, he who had slapped that woman, then plunged off to the gallery later, to bitter, reproachful brooding.

I could understand his eyes, then. I could understand his agony of eagerness to see her again, at once—his message he had tried to send by me: To take no steps.

It was all a mystery to me, but I wished I had bitten my tongue out before I had blurted out my angry words.

Keller came suddenly to my rescue. "All this is getting us nowhere; petty rows don't matter. The question is, where has Nora gone to? Since she hasn't changed her clothes, she's probably somewhere about, and I suggest we go out and help the men who are looking."

The men trooped off for coats against the chill of the October night, and we women were left together. I had a feeling that I was in disgrace, a dangerous interloper who might explode at any moment with more shattering bombs of revelation.

Suddenly Mrs. Crane said, in her practical voice: "A bandit couldn't possibly have got in here, could he, Carrie—in the window and carried her off?"

"It sounds fantastic," said Mrs. Keller.

"Well, it's been done." "I don't think that's possible. Look and see for yourself," said her sister; and they came to the window. I hastened to help undo the bolts, and opened the wide casement. We all looked out in turn, the crisp air striking sharply on our bare shoulders and arms. I liked the shiver of it; it seemed to speak of clarity and reality, after all this pother of domestic brawls and a vanished woman. One by one we three craned our heads over the edge, examining the scanty stone still.

"It doesn't look possible," Mrs. Crane admitted. "He might have used a ladder though—those thugs manage anything."

"That's too fantastic," said Mrs. Keller again. She added dryly: "You'll find Nora is safe in New York, enjoying the powwow. . . . I shall never forgive her—treating me like this."

Down below us, we could hear the voices of some of the men returning. "They haven't found her," said Mrs. Crane, drawing in her head. "I expect I'll get a cold in my nose for this."

I took one more look out, down at that group of men; and so it was I who saw first what there was to see, down in the checker of shade in the shrubbery directly beneath the window. Something half hidden—a faint, lightish blur.

I said excitedly: "Mrs. Keller— isn't there something there?" And I drew back her to look.

She called sharply down to the men: "Look there—in the shrubbery—under the window. There is something—"

It was invisible from where they were, for the shrubbery was thick and high, and the front part unbroken. Nearer the house the branches had bent in under the burden that they found there, the still slight body of a woman in gold pajamas: the lifeless form of Nora Harriden.

CHAPTER III

It couldn't be real, I felt. It was like some scene in a dreadful play. These couldn't be real people; this wasn't a real death. . . . It didn't seem possible that Nora Harriden could be dead; my impression of her vitality, of her exultant aliveness, was so intense that I could not bring myself to believe in her death. Not till I had looked on her face.

I saw the thin, sharp curve of the reddened lips, like little knife-blades, and thought—in spite of my pity for the dead—that it was a hard, cruel, triumphant little mouth, made for exultancy.

They were kneeling all about her, feeling her pulse, her body.

She lay in those incongruous gold pajamas, one slim-silken foot bare of its shining slipper, on a sofa in the hall, until the doctor came.

Nor bones were broken, he reported; the bushes had eased her fall. But over her ear was a ghastly wound with the blood dried about it, and dark stains on her temple.

"Struck on something hard," he said sapiently. "Penetrated—death must have been almost immediate."

His voice, as he phrased that, slid into a consolatory cadence. He was looking up at the husband, who stood motionless beside him, his head slightly bent. I could not see his face; his hands were clenched at the sides. I felt suddenly a queer pity for those hands—I wondered if one of them had indeed struck out at that adored woman who had infuriated him so much. . . .

And then I thought again that it might have been Alan Deck. Surely the husband would rather have the onus of that blow upon himself than admit that another man was lounging in his wife's room—though perhaps these people thought little of casual intimacies.

A conference was going on. I heard Harriden's voice saying, in his grim, unshaken tones: "She probably wanted more air—tried to open the window wider, and was dizzy—she'd had headache stuff—and fell."

"Oh, an accident, undoubtedly," said Keller in his convincing, everyday voice.

I heard the doctor assenting. I had a feeling that he would assent politely to anything these plutocratic clients dictated—with his own secret reservations.

"She was there on the bed when you came up, wasn't she, Dan?" Mrs. Keller asked.

The husband hesitated. "I couldn't be sure. The room was dark, and I assumed she was still on the bed sleeping, so didn't speak." He added, with positiveness now: "She was there when I went down. When I came in to see her after I had dressed—that was at eight, or a little after—she was at her head ached, and she wanted nothing sent up. I rang for the maid and told her not to come in to do anything in the room—that Mrs. Harriden wanted complete rest. I don't remember whether Mrs. Harriden said anything further to you or not, Anson. Did she?"

"Why no, sir," said Anson. "It was just you, sir, at the door."

"But you saw her there on the bed?" "Why, yes, sir," said Anson, a little surprised. "I could see through the door. You sort of whispered to me. You said she was asleep."

"Did I?" said Harriden wearily. "I forget—I think she'd turned over and wanted to sleep. And I don't remember whether the window was open or not. I suppose it was a little way."

"Anson," said Mrs. Keller, "was the window open when you came up?"

"Why, yes, ma'am, it was," said Anson promptly. "I remember the room felt chilly, so I closed and locked it. Whether Nora Harriden had gone out that window before her husband looked in, or just afterward, it had all happened while we were sitting down there about that dinner-table, eating and drinking and uttering our banalities."

There was more talk, I remember; and then Nora Harriden was carried upstairs. Her husband carried her, her bare arms drooping over his big shoulders, her blood-stained head like a child's asleep on him, and took her to the bed I had seen waiting.

Then Mrs. Keller, practical in all stress, said abruptly, "Look here, Dan—I want you to take charge of her things." She went to the closet. "If her pearls are in there, I don't want the responsibility. Take them in your room," she said, and stepped quickly inside.

The next instant she gave a queer, muffled cry and came stumbling out. "Quick—somebody—come!" she said incoherently.

And then, in a thin voice of horror: "It's blood! I stepped in it!"

Mrs. Crane caught hold of her and we all stood about, staring down at the jade green slipper she lifted, at the wet, dark stain on the sole. The princess gave a little cry, and Keller and the doctor hurried into the closet. Harriden stood rigid by his wife's bed.

Then both men came backing out, and Keller was holding up a forefinger, dark-stained and sticky.

"It's blood all right," he said. The doctor, looking down at his own finger, nodded affirmatively. Every one stood staring at them a moment then flattered forward to that open closet door and I went with them. The light was on in it. On the floor, just under a sweep of orchid silk, lay a dark heavy pool, its edges blurred where feet had stepped into it. It must have been there, dark, unregarded, when Harriden had stepped in, to glance about for his wife's gold pajamas. Harriden marched to the closet door, and I shrank aside, trembling in my excitement and pity. He seemed to stay there quite a time, and when he came out his face was more than ever like granite.

"Yes, it's blood," he said, as if no else's word could be accepted. I glanced about for Alan Deck. He was not in the room; he had not followed when we had trooped like sheep after Harriden and his dead wife. Perhaps the sight of Nora in Harriden's arms. . . . I was grateful that he was spared the sight of Nora Harriden's blood on her closet floor.

"This puts a new complexion on it," said Keller. His words seemed incongruous, but his tone did full justice to the terrible gravity of the situation. He turned directly to Harriden.

"That blood in the closet—that came before she went out the window. This doesn't look an accident, Dan. Some one got in here. Some thug—"

His eyes turned to the window. "I suppose that way is possible," he said grudgingly, "though how any one could get in the grounds—I suppose he was after her jewelry. He got in, thinking the room empty, went to her closet to rummage, and she jumped off the bed after him—she had plenty of pluck."

He paused, and the assenting undertone of murmur about him confirmed Nora Harriden's pluck. "Then," said Keller, "he struck her and flung her out."

Keller's next question, so eminent that of the practical man, seemed

"They'll never get him," growled Harriden, in grating contempt. His bleak eyes seemed to say, "And if they do, what's that to me—now?" I knew how he must be flinching at having his wife's name dragged through the publicity of a murder case.

"I'll guard," I heard him say gruffly, and the doctor murmured that he would stay with him. I suspected he had his idea that Harriden might do something desperate to himself if left alone just then.

We were all trooping downstairs, I rather on the outskirts, when Monty Mitchell dropped back beside me. His small, bright eyes were glittering behind their glasses.

"Why would Nora run into that closet after a thief?" he put directly to me. "She had pluck, but she wasn't a fool. She'd have run to the door and screamed."

"He may have caught her and dragged her in," I said, and then, "She was excited—no one of us knows what he'll do when suddenly flung off balance."

"I know damned well what I wouldn't do," the young man retorted. He had lost his chatty, bantering air; he looked extremely competent. He seemed quite pleasantly excited.

"Anyway he shoved her in that closet before she was dead," he went on. "She must have been there some little time for all that blood to form. Then he thought again and decided to give it the look of an accident so he put her out the window. . . . A strong fellow."

I thought of how easily Harriden had carried his wife up the stairs and murmured, "She doesn't look heavy."

"About a hundred and fifteen," said Mitchell practically. He paused at the foot of the stairs and stood beside me, frowning intently as he tried to piece out the situation. He said, thinking aloud, "Dan did not see the blood when he went in to look for those gold pajamas—but then Dan was glancing along the level of his eye. . . . This fellow might have seen it when he came back—I'd say he did, and that was the reason he locked the door and took the key away. Presumably the key was in the lock, up to then. . . . And I'd say that he got out the window. He had the diamonds and didn't dare wait for more loot."

"And I'd say," I spoke up, somewhat spiritedly, "that every one of you is thinking about how it was done and what was taken and not about how awful it is."

Mitchell gave me a quick look. "You seem a simple-hearted young creature," he told me. "You never knew her—yet you rushed to her room to help her cover her slapped cheek!"

He gave a short laugh. "You may be glad she wasn't there—she'd have dreamed you'd come in anything but malice."

"You don't make her sound very pleasant."

"I never liked her," he said bluntly. "Come and have a drink. We need it." The others had set the example and as we entered the white dining-room for the second time that evening I saw him put an empty glass down over me that it was only then that he had heard of the grim discovery in the closet. It was tragic enough, I thought, to know the woman I loved was dead, but to have to learn that violently, to have to hear it and give no sign. . . .

The police had come, four or five named Donahay whose eyes were as cynical as Harriden's own, and the fingerprint men and cameramen tramped through all the rooms, searching the shrubbery. Again I had that sense of grotesque unreality, as if this were a scene from some morbid play.

"He might have had a pass-key," said the princess thoughtfully. Harriden unlocked the case; he opened the lid and made such slow business of examining it, staring down into each tray of bright, glistening things that I wondered if he were thinking that those lovely baubles would never go about her throat and wrists again. He must be thinking it.

Then his voice came, with that sharp, almost grumbling irritation in it. "The pearls are here—and the emeralds. And a lot of other junk. But the diamond chain isn't here."

"The diamond chain—her yellow diamonds?" Mrs. Keller caught up quickly. "Why, she was wearing them!" Harriden stood a moment as if remembering. His eyebrows kept twitching but that was the only sign of emotion in that rigid face.

"Yes, she was wearing the chain," he said. "She had it on."

Some one said, "Hasn't she it on now?" and Harriden turned quickly to the bed. He bent over her, then straightened and came back to us. "It's gone," he said.

"That's a clue, then," the doctor declared. "You must lose no time, Mr. Keller, in notifying the police. All his repugnance toward the sensational publicity was in his tone but he moved once to the room phone, his wife murmuring to him in agitated undertones. The doctor went on. "And nothing more here must be touched. We must set a guard here."

"Do we have to go through all this?" demanded Harriden. "Let the damn diamonds go."

"I'm afraid we must," Dr. Olliphant told him. "It's the only way to get the—the man."

"They'll never get him," growled Harriden, in grating contempt. His bleak eyes seemed to say, "And if they do, what's that to me—now?" I knew how he must be flinching at having his wife's name dragged through the publicity of a murder case.

IMPROVED UNIFORM INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

Lesson for May 31 THE LAST SUPPER

LESSON TEXT—Luke 22:7-23. GOLDEN TEXT—This do in remembrance of me.—Luke 22:19. PRIMARY TOPIC—The Supper Jesus Gave His Friends. JUNIOR TOPIC—The Lord's Supper. INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—What the Lord's Supper Means to Me. YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—What the Lord's Supper Means to Jesus.

The last meal that Jesus ate with his disciples was the Passover, the memorial of the national deliverance which pointed to the supreme deliverance to be effected by Christ on the cross of Calvary. In connection with this Passover, the feast of the new covenant was instituted. This feast also has a double import. It looks backward to the great deliverance wrought through Christ's atoning death, and forward to the even greater deliverance which He shall accomplish at his second coming (1 Cor. 11:26).

1. The Last Passover (vv. 7-18). 2. The Passover prepared (vv. 13-15). 3. As the time had arrived for the killing of the Passover, Jesus directed Peter and John to make ready for it (v. 8).

b. The disciples inquired (v. 9) where they should prepare the Passover. Doubtless, they were eager to be of service to their Master and Lord.

c. Jesus gave strange directions (vv. 10-12), that they should go into the city, where they would find a man bearing a pitcher of water. The custom was for women to carry the water. This unusual occurrence would make it the easier for them to recognize the man of whom they would ask, "Where is the guest chamber where I shall eat the Passover with my disciples?"

d. The disciples gave unquestioning obedience (v. 13), not permitting the unusual instructions to raise the question of sanity or reasonableness. Jesus, because he was omniscient, knew just how the matter would turn out, and the disciples found it even so.

2. The Passover eaten (vv. 14-18). a. The historic group around that table (v. 14) was composed of Jesus and the Twelve, the apostles.

b. Jesus' words to the disciples (vv. 15-18). (1) "I have desired to eat this Passover with you before I suffer" (v. 15). He desired to show them the meaning of the passion through which he was to go. He also craved their human sympathy as he passed through this terrible ordeal.

(2) "I will not any more eat thereof until it be fulfilled in the kingdom of God" (v. 16). His death was the antitypical fulfillment of the Passover meal. He declared that this would be the last time that they could share together this sacred ordinance before the completion of his mediatorial work.

(3) "Take this cup and divide it among yourselves" (vv. 17, 18). By the token of the cup the disciples were partaking of the shed blood. This cup should be distinguished from the cup of the feast of the new covenant.

II. The Feast of the New Covenant (vv. 19, 20). This feast took place at the close of the paschal supper.

1. The bread a symbol of Christ's body (v. 19). As bread nourishes and strengthens our bodies, so Christ is food to our spiritual nature. Unless the body receives nourishment, it decays. Unless our souls feed upon Christ, we shall perish. Christ's giving the physical bread to his disciples signified the giving of himself to them.

2. The cup a symbol of Christ's blood (v. 20). He said, "This cup is the new testament in my blood which was shed for you," indicating that each one must personally accept the atonement made by the shedding of his blood.

III. The Treachery of Judas (vv. 21-23). 1. The time of its manifestation (v. 21). It was while they were eating the last Passover that Jesus made announcement of the betrayal. Perhaps Jesus was in this manner offering Judas an opportunity at this last moment to repent.

2. The betrayal was by the determined counsel of God (v. 22, cf. Acts 2:23). Nothing takes place by chance. Even the sinful acts of wicked men come within the permissive providence of God. This does not, however, lessen the guilt of sinners, for Jesus said, "Woe unto the man by whom he is betrayed."

3. The sorrowful question (v. 23). That the disciples were not suspicious of one another is evident from the personal nature of the question they asked, "Lord, is it I?" (Matt. 26:22). Well may each believer ask if he is in any way betraying his Savior and Lord.

True Happiness Genuine happiness is the delicate perfume of a holy life. The sanctified soul exhales happiness as the flowers garden of conscious spirits and its atmosphere is laden with happiness as the normal product of their purity.—D. C. Knowles.

The May term of Davie Superior court convened in Mocksville Monday, with his Honor, Judge Hoyle Sink, of Lexington, on the bench.

The docket is small this term, with no very important cases to be tried. The court crowd Monday and today, Tuesday, is very small.

There will be a Home Coming day at Yadkin Valley Baptist church on Sunday, May 31st. The public is given a special invitation to be present for this annual occasion. All are requested to bring a well filled basket. Singers from Boone, Winston Salem and other places will be present.

Let Us Have More Living Memorials.

Dr. J. R. Lowery formerly of Davie County now of Salisbury, N. C. in memorializing his beloved father, the late Dabney L. Lowery of Davie County, in a service of love for suffering humanity, is certainly taking a step forward towards the example taught by the daily living of the young physician of Galilee.

All memorials whether of marble, granite structures or trees express love and honor, but this memorial is one that will restore health and happiness unto sick and discouraged souls, one that will live and stand above material memorials—Again let me say—LET US HAVE MORE LIVING MEMORIALS.

Hopkins Talks; Not in Public

But Critics of New Deal Are Pilloried While Crowds
Watch Show.

Having blocked any effective bipartisan investigation of the WPA situation throughout the country Senator Joseph T. Robinson, leader of the New Deal forces in the Senate, has been delaying Senate action on the demand for facts about large beneficiaries of AAA.

Demands had been made by Senators Davis (Pennsylvania), Vandenberg (Michigan), and Holt (West Virginia) for a thorough sifting of country-wide charges of political waste and inefficiency in work-relief. They produced a mass of documentary evidence in support of their charges. Senator Robinson, by a clever maneuver, was successful in having recalled an original report of a Senate committee favoring a real investigation. He then had two additional New Deal Senators added to the committee. This seemed to assure success for the New Deal faction in their effort to suppress the facts.

Washington observers have pointed out the picture presented several days ago when two committees were in session on Capitol Hill. In the Capitol a subcommittee of the House Appropriations Committee for five hours questioned Administrator Harry Hopkins about AAA. Mr. Hopkins in three years had administered the expenditure of almost 8,000 million dollars on work-relief projects and other relief. President Roosevelt had asked for an appropriation of 1,500 millions more.

Hopkins Testifies.
As usual with subcommittees on appropriations, the doors were closed. Stenographic reports were taken of the proceedings but the printed report of the hearing, as usual, was not expected to reach the public for some weeks. Even when printed and made public the report probably will have been "edited."

The Washington Post said the next morning:

"Opinion, even among members of Congress who are demanding that the public be told how relief money is being spent, was growing that this and similar hearings will be as near an investigation of relief as will be conducted during the present session."
While there is no criticism of an appropriations subcommittee following the usual procedure of holding executive sessions, critics of WPA declare that Administrator Hopkins should also appear before a committee authorized to investigate work-relief. They say a public hearing of the charges would be a far different matter than an executive session of a House committee which does not pretend to investigate, and which meets behind closed doors.

A Different Scene.
A strikingly different picture was presented in an ornate chamber in the Senate Office Building on the same afternoon. The Black Lobby Committee was investigating the activities of an organization that had been critical of the New Deal. Policemen handled the crowd that sought admittance. As witnesses took the stand, in front of the high dais on which the Senatorial investigators sat, photographers for newspapers and magazines came and went, punctuating the proceedings with flashes. Reporters representing all the national news services and many individual newspapers sat near the committee members, busily taking notes. This was a colorful political melodrama, staged in a room with richly draped windows, fluted columns, gleaming chandeliers.

The New Deal believes in the glowing light of publicity for any investigation of those who criticize New Deal policies. It will not submit Mr. Hopkins to public questioning if it can avoid it. "It makes a difference whose baby has the measles."

Spending by New Deal Exceeds Big Receipts

Treasury figures for the present fiscal year, up to April 14, show that the Administration still is spending far more than it takes in. From July 1, 1935, to the date mentioned the Administration spent $1.74 for every dollar it received. Inevitably, under such a ratio of spending and income, the Administration's deficit mounted still higher and the public debt was increased by more than 2 1/2 billions of dollars. Expenditures, deficits and public debts all rose in spite of the fact that receipts from taxes thus far this fiscal year have exceeded those of the same period of last year by $220,000,000. The Government is thus going further and further into the red and borrowing billions to make up the difference.

Increasing taxes have been made necessary by the Administration spending programs and Congress has been in a quandary as to how to get additional large sums from the people without making the operation too apparent. Even a back-breaking tax plan that would pay off present deficits and reduce the public debt will be only a start. The Administration increased its expenditures by more than $225,000,000 in the first nine and one-half months of this fiscal year. So long as expenditures continue to exceed receipts the necessity for more taxes will continue, economists say, and no progress will have been made toward putting the nation's finances in order.

No State Debt.

Last week the treasury of the State of Nebraska had a reported balance of more than twenty-one million dollars. Because the state was debtless and had neither an income tax nor a sales tax. Gov. R. L. Cochran called Nebraska a "taxpayers' paradise."

Debt in excess of one hundred thousand dollars has been forbidden by the Nebraska constitution since 1876, and so politicians have had no show to gobble up the peoples money. How does Nebraska's debt compare to that of North Carolina and many other states?
